Syllabus
Learning Objectives	This course aims to get used to the idea of the coexistence/competition/convergence of national laws. It does so by choosing an elective field, particularly sophisticated due to its dating tradition: private law. For this reason, the course will explore with particular attention the dialogue between common and civil law systems, in full awareness that this is a reductive option but of immediate practical utility. The analysis will focus on areas, institutes and application sectors of great importance: from contracts to civil liability. The understanding of the juridical phenomenon will, consequently, be preferred to its detailed knowledge; and we will look at the practical application, both internally and internationally, without disdaining assessments about the level of functionality, tempered by the need to ensure interesting homologations.
Course prerequisites	The only prerequisite is to have passed (successfully) the exam of private law
Contents	The course will be divided into three modules. The first module aims to illustrate the methodologies of legal comparison (in particular great attention will be paid to the deepening of the following profiles: the purpose of the comparison; the approval; the formants, the cryptotypes, the transplants and the circulation of macro-micro comparative models) and to introduce students to the knowledge of the main systems established in the world. After a first general overview, the attention will focus on the western legal tradition, in its variants of civil law and common law. Particular importance will be assigned to the US experience, also because of its centrality in relation to the processes of globalization. The second module and the third will concern the analysis, in comparative terms, of the main private law institutions, in particular civil liability and contract. For this purpose, original English materials will be distributed to students; those materials will be the subject of discussion and critical study with the direct involvement of all

	participants in the course. Seminars are planned to deepen, among other things, English legal terminology and the use of economic analysis techniques of law. For a successful participation in the course a basic knowledge of English is required.
