Learning Objectives	An understanding of the theoretical foundations of digital culture and its evolution from the end of the last millennium to the 21st century through an archaeology of media that considers the study of the image and audio-visual languages at the centre of the didactic programme, with a sensitive approach to gender studies, in order to make intelligible and practicable all the audiovisual texts of contemporaneity, from analogue to digital photography, from music videos to memes, from early cinema to television serials. A particular look is given to the field of sound, investigating sound studies as a privileged place for the application of theories and practices related to sound and urban space.
Course prerequisites	Web surfing skills, basic knowledge of social networks expected.

Teaching strategie	Lectures, viewing of audiovisual and audio material, exploration of online platforms, seminars and group or individual case study exercises of the student's choice.
