Contents

The course aims to illustrate, mainly, the topics of the general part of criminal law, analyzing the historical reasons of the criminal system, with a look at European influences and those of the jurisprudence of the supranational Courts. The course is informally structured in two parts: the first is dedicated to the study of general section of criminal law and, therefore, to the analysis of constitutional and general principles in criminal matters (legality, guilt, harm principle, etc.) as well as the definition and structure of the offence (typical fact; causes of justification; imputability, intention, negligence, ignorance, etc.) and the forms of its manifestation, in addition to the analysis of the penalty; the second is dedicated to the analysis of individual crimes that may most affect the specialist path of the student, such as crime of enslavement and those related to illegal immigration. Attention is also paid to the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court. The examination and discussion of practical cases will make it possible to verify the specific categories of general criminal law.
