Expected learning outcomes	The course aims to analyze the food crises in the globalized economy: from the crisis of the European protectionist agricultural policy, to the management of production surpluses, to the absence of equity in the distribution of food between the richest and developing countries . The re-emergence of food insecurity requires a renewed reflection on the protection of social rights, from the right to food to the right to produce food, in the international context. Through the analysis of the European regulatory evolution in agriculture and through the study of international, European and national sources relating to the protection of the right to food, students will be able to acquire a thorough knowledge of the sources, also in English; during the course, various foreign judgments will be analyzed which will complete the ability to analyze legal texts, allowing the acquisition of reading skills and critical analysis. During the lessons, oral exercises will be stimulated in order to improve communication skills in relation to specific learning.

Contents	The course will explore the following topics: 1) The new food insecurity 2) Right to food and food sovereignty 3) Agricultural products between food and goods 4) The social function of agriculture 5) Pandemic crisis and agricultural markets
