Syllabus
Learning Objectives	Develop the ability to apply the theoretical context to social reality. Communication skills Ability to socialize knowledge with clear and technical language
Course prerequisites	Knowledge and understanding. Provide knowledge of the main theoretical and methodological tools of analysis.
Contents	The course aims to analyze and deepen the birth and developments of sociology as a science that deals with observing the social organization of individuals and social systems in general; following a chronological criterion, the classics of sociology will be taken into consideration, starting from A. Comte up to the sociology of contemporary sociologists, in order to have a complete picture of the main theories and the most important exponents of sociology. Course contents. The course aims to provide a historical-theoretical introduction to sociology giving space to the main paradigms of interpretation and reading of social phenomena, both following the holistic vision of society as a source that "conditions and determines" individual actions and following the individualistic vision according to which, on the contrary, it is society that is the product-result of individual actions. This different dualistic vision is also found in the methodology of sociological research of which both the tools and the techniques will be examined. Finally, the classical themes of sociology will be presented, starting from the institutions of primary and secondary socialization up to collective social movements.
