Syllabus	Migrations are one of the most relevant social phenomena in contemporary global societies and are rapidly reshaping the idea of belonging and membership typical of modern nation states. In spite of being a structural component of contemporary societies, migrants are increasingly seen with suspicion in destination countries, while migration policies have become increasingly restrictive. The outcome of this effort to limit human mobility is nonetheless highly questionable. While economic and forced migrations are still on the rise, due to persistent regional geo-economic imbalances and geo-political instability, border control policies are putting a strain on human rights and asylum law. Western countries are thus faced with the challenge of finding the right balance between a well-managed migration, and the duty to respect human rights of migrants and refugees. A challenge that has become particularly demanding along the main fault-lines of the contemporary geopolitics of migration, where, as migratory pressure increases, border control policies become more and more violent.
-----------------	---

	The course will address these topics from the perspective of different field of studies such as law, sociology and political theory, focusing on how EU and domestic policies are redefining the relationships between migration, borders and human rights in the Euro-Mediterranean region.
Prerequisites	None
Learning outcomes	Students will acquire knowledge of the main social theory of migration, knowledge of the main trends in contemporary migration law and policies, and a critical understanding of the social and political dynamics driving border control practices. They will also develop a peculiar ability to understand the implications of contemporary border control practices for the protection of the human rights of migrants and refugees. Students will be constantly stimulated to debate and critical discussion. During the course they will also be invited to carry out small researches on related topics and present them orally during 'class discussion' sessions.
Course contents	The course can ideally be divided in two main sections during which eight main topics will be addressed. The first section (topics 1 to 4) will offer a general introduction to the social theory of migration, and an overview on migration law and policies in contemporary societies. The second section (topics 5 to 8) will focus on the changing nature of borders and will describe the most recent developments in border control practices across main destination countries.
