

Chapter V

Peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)

A. Introduction

46. At its sixty-seventh session (2015), the Commission decided to include the topic “Jus cogens” in its programme of work and appointed Mr. Dire Tladi as Special Rapporteur for the topic.⁶⁹⁰ The General Assembly subsequently, in its resolution 70/236 of 23 December 2015, took note of the decision of the Commission to include the topic in its programme of work.

47. The Special Rapporteur submitted three reports from 2016 to 2018, which the Commission considered at its sixty-eighth to seventieth sessions (2016–2018),⁶⁹¹ respectively. Following the debates on those reports, the Commission decided to refer the draft conclusions contained in those reports to the Drafting Committee. The Commission heard interim reports from the Chairpersons of the Drafting Committee on peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) containing the draft conclusions provisionally adopted by the Drafting Committee at the sixty-eighth to seventieth sessions, respectively.

48. At its sixty-ninth session (2017), following a proposal by the Special Rapporteur in his second report,⁶⁹² the Commission decided to change the title of the topic from “Jus cogens” to “Peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)”.⁶⁹³

B. Consideration of the topic at the present session

49. At the present session, the Commission had before it the fourth report of the Special Rapporteur (A/CN.4/727). The fourth report discussed the previous consideration of the topic in the Commission and the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly. It also addressed the questions of regional jus cogens and the inclusion of an illustrative list of peremptory norms of general international (jus cogens) in the draft conclusions. On the basis of his analysis, the Special Rapporteur proposed one draft conclusion containing a non-exhaustive list of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).

50. The Commission considered the fourth report at its 3459th to 3463rd, and 3465th meetings, from 8 to 10 May, and from 14 to 16 May 2019.

51. At its 3465th meeting, on 16 May 2019, the Commission referred draft conclusion 24, as contained in the Special Rapporteur’s fourth report, to the Drafting Committee on the understanding that the list contained in the draft conclusion would be moved to an annex and that it would be limited to those peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) that the Commission had previously referred to.

52. The Commission considered the report of the Drafting Committee (A/CN.4/L.936) at its 3472nd meeting, held on 31 May 2019, and adopted the draft conclusions on peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) on first reading (see section C.1 below).

53. At its 3499th to 3504th meetings, from 5 to 7 August 2019, the Commission adopted the commentaries to the aforementioned draft conclusions (see section C.2 below).

⁶⁹⁰ At its 3257th meeting, on 27 May 2015 (Official Records of the General Assembly, Seventieth Session, Supplement No. 10 (A/70/10), para. 286). The topic had been included in the long-term programme of work of the Commission during its sixty-sixth session (2014), on the basis of the proposal contained in the annex to the report of the Commission (ibid., Sixty-ninth Session, Supplement No. 10 (A/69/10), para. 23).

⁶⁹¹ A/CN.4/693 (first report), A/CN.4/706 (second report) and A/CN.4/714 and Corr.1 (third report).

⁶⁹² A/CN.4/706, para. 90.

⁶⁹³ Official Records of the General Assembly, Seventy-second Session, Supplement No. 10 (A/72/10), para. 146).

54. At its 3504th meeting, on 7 August 2019, the Commission decided, in accordance with articles 16 to 21 of its statute, to transmit the draft conclusions (see section C below), through the Secretary-General, to Governments for comments and observations, with the request that such comments and observations be submitted to the Secretary-General by 1 December 2020.

55. At its 3504th meeting, on 7 August 2019, the Commission further expressed its deep appreciation for the outstanding contribution of the Special Rapporteur, Mr. Dire Tladi, which had enabled the Commission to bring to a successful conclusion its first reading of the draft conclusions on peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).

C. Text of the draft conclusions on peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), adopted by the Commission on first reading

1. Text of the draft conclusions

56. The text of the draft conclusions adopted by the Commission on first reading is reproduced below.

Peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)

Part One

Introduction

Conclusion 1

Scope

The present draft conclusions concern the identification and legal consequences of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).

Conclusion 2

Definition of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens)

A peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) is a norm accepted and recognized by the international community of States as a whole as a norm from which no derogation is permitted and which can be modified only by a subsequent norm of general international law having the same character.

Conclusion 3

General nature of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)

Peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) reflect and protect fundamental values of the international community, are hierarchically superior to other rules of international law and are universally applicable.

Part Two

Identification of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)

Conclusion 4

Criteria for the identification of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens)

To identify a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), it is necessary to establish that the norm in question meets the following criteria:

(a) it is a norm of general international law; and

(b) it is accepted and recognized by the international community of States as a whole as a norm from which no derogation is permitted and which can be modified only by a subsequent norm of general international law having the same character.

Conclusion 5Bases for peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)

1. Customary international law is the most common basis for peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).
2. Treaty provisions and general principles of law may also serve as bases for peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).

Conclusion 6Acceptance and recognition

1. The requirement of “acceptance and recognition” as a criterion for identifying a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) is distinct from acceptance and recognition as a norm of general international law.
2. To identify a norm as a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), there must be evidence that such a norm is accepted and recognized as one from which no derogation is permitted and which can only be modified by a subsequent norm of general international law having the same character.

Conclusion 7International community of States as a whole

1. It is the acceptance and recognition by the international community of States as a whole that is relevant for the identification of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).
2. Acceptance and recognition by a very large majority of States is required for the identification of a norm as a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens); acceptance and recognition by all States is not required.
3. While the positions of other actors may be relevant in providing context and for assessing acceptance and recognition by the international community of States as a whole, these positions cannot, in and of themselves, form part of such acceptance and recognition.

Conclusion 8Evidence of acceptance and recognition

1. Evidence of acceptance and recognition that a norm of general international law is a peremptory norm (jus cogens) may take a wide range of forms.
2. Such forms of evidence include, but are not limited to: public statements made on behalf of States; official publications; government legal opinions; diplomatic correspondence; legislative and administrative acts; decisions of national courts; treaty provisions; and resolutions adopted by an international organization or at an intergovernmental conference.

Conclusion 9Subsidiary means for the determination of the peremptory character of norms of general international law

1. Decisions of international courts and tribunals, in particular of the International Court of Justice, are a subsidiary means for determining the peremptory character of norms of general international law.
2. The works of expert bodies established by States or international organizations and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations may also serve as subsidiary means for determining the peremptory character of norms of general international law.

Part ThreeLegal consequences of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)

Conclusion 10Treaties conflicting with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens)

1. A treaty is void if, at the time of its conclusion, it conflicts with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). The provisions of such a treaty have no legal force.
2. If a new peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) emerges, any existing treaty which is in conflict with that norm becomes void and terminates. The parties to such a treaty are released from any obligation further to perform the treaty.

Conclusion 11Separability of treaty provisions conflicting with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens)

1. A treaty which, at the time of its conclusion, conflicts with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) is void in whole, and no separation of the provisions of the treaty is permitted.
2. A treaty which becomes void because of the emergence of a new peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) terminates in whole, unless:
 - (a) the provisions that are in conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) are separable from the remainder of the treaty with regard to their application;
 - (b) it appears from the treaty or is otherwise established that acceptance of the said provisions was not an essential basis of the consent of any party to be bound by the treaty as a whole; and
 - (c) continued performance of the remainder of the treaty would not be unjust.

Conclusion 12Consequences of the invalidity and termination of treaties conflicting with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens)

1. Parties to a treaty which is void as a result of being in conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) at the time of the treaty's conclusion have a legal obligation to:
 - (a) eliminate as far as possible the consequences of any act performed in reliance on any provision of the treaty which conflicts with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens); and
 - (b) bring their mutual relations into conformity with the peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).
2. The termination of a treaty on account of the emergence of a new peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) does not affect any right, obligation or legal situation created through the execution of the treaty prior to the termination of the treaty, provided that those rights, obligations or situations may thereafter be maintained only to the extent that their maintenance is not in itself in conflict with the new peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).

Conclusion 13Absence of effect of reservations to treaties on peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)

1. A reservation to a treaty provision that reflects a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) does not affect the binding nature of that norm, which shall continue to apply as such.
2. A reservation cannot exclude or modify the legal effect of a treaty in a manner contrary to a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).

Conclusion 14Rules of customary international law conflicting with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens)

1. A rule of customary international law does not come into existence if it conflicts with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). This is without prejudice to the possible modification of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) by a subsequent norm of general international law having the same character.
2. A rule of customary international law not of a peremptory character ceases to exist if and to the extent that it conflicts with a new peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).
3. The persistent objector rule does not apply to peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).

Conclusion 15Obligations created by unilateral acts of States conflicting with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens)

1. A unilateral act of a State manifesting the intention to be bound by an obligation under international law that would be in conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) does not create such an obligation.
2. An obligation under international law created by a unilateral act of a State ceases to exist if and to the extent that it conflicts with a new peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).

Conclusion 16Obligations created by resolutions, decisions or other acts of international organizations conflicting with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens)

A resolution, decision or other act of an international organization that would otherwise have binding effect does not create obligations under international law if and to the extent that they conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).

Conclusion 17Peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) as obligations owed to the international community as a whole (obligations erga omnes)

1. Peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) give rise to obligations owed to the international community as a whole (obligations erga omnes), in which all States have a legal interest.
2. Any State is entitled to invoke the responsibility of another State for a breach of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), in accordance with the rules on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.

Conclusion 18Peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) and circumstances precluding wrongfulness

No circumstance precluding wrongfulness under the rules on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts may be invoked with regard to any act of a State that is not in conformity with an obligation arising under a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).

Conclusion 19Particular consequences of serious breaches of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)

1. States shall cooperate to bring to an end through lawful means any serious breach by a State of an obligation arising under a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).

2. No State shall recognize as lawful a situation created by a serious breach by a State of an obligation arising under a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), nor render aid or assistance in maintaining that situation.

3. A breach of an obligation arising under a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) is serious if it involves a gross or systematic failure by the responsible State to fulfil that obligation.

4. This draft conclusion is without prejudice to the other consequences that a serious breach by a State of an obligation arising under a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) may entail under international law.

Conclusion 20

Interpretation and application consistent with peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)

Where it appears that there may be a conflict between a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) and another rule of international law, the latter is, as far as possible, to be interpreted and applied so as to be consistent with the former.

Conclusion 21

Procedural requirements

1. A State which invokes a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) as a ground for the invalidity or termination of a rule of international law is to notify other States concerned of its claim. The notification is to be in writing and is to indicate the measure proposed to be taken with respect to the rule of international law in question.

2. If none of the other States concerned raises an objection within a period which, except in cases of special urgency, shall not be less than three months, the invoking State may carry out the measure which it has proposed.

3. If any State concerned raises an objection, then the States concerned are to seek a solution through the means indicated in Article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations.

4. If no solution is reached within a period of twelve months, and the objecting State or States concerned offer to submit the matter to the International Court of Justice, the invoking State may not carry out the measure which it has proposed until the dispute is resolved.

5. This draft conclusion is without prejudice to the procedural requirements set forth in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, the relevant rules concerning the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice, or other applicable dispute settlement provisions agreed by the States concerned.

Part Four

General provisions

Conclusion 22

Without prejudice to consequences that specific peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) may otherwise entail

The present draft conclusions are without prejudice to consequences that specific peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) may otherwise entail under international law.

Conclusion 23

Non-exhaustive list

Without prejudice to the existence or subsequent emergence of other peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), a non-exhaustive list of norms that the International Law Commission has previously referred to as having that status is to be found in the annex to the present draft conclusions.

Annex

- (a) The prohibition of aggression;
- (b) The prohibition of genocide;
- (c) The prohibition of crimes against humanity;
- (d) The basic rules of international humanitarian law;
- (e) The prohibition of racial discrimination and apartheid;
- (f) The prohibition of slavery;
- (g) The prohibition of torture;
- (h) The right of self-determination.

2. Text of the draft conclusions on peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) and commentaries thereto

57. The text of the draft conclusions on peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) adopted by the Commission, on first reading, together with commentaries thereto, is reproduced below.

Peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)

Part One

Introduction

Conclusion 1

Scope

The present draft conclusions concern the identification and legal consequences of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).

Commentary

(1) As is always the case with the Commission's outputs, the draft conclusions are to be read together with the commentaries.

(2) These draft conclusions concern peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), which have increasingly been referred to by international and regional courts, national courts, States and other actors. These draft conclusions are aimed at providing guidance to all those who may be called upon to determine the existence of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) and their legal consequences. Given the importance and potentially far-reaching implications of peremptory norms, it is essential that the identification of such norms and their legal consequences be done systematically and in accordance with a generally accepted methodology.

(3) Draft conclusion 1 is introductory in nature and sets out the scope of the present draft conclusions. It provides in simple terms that the present draft conclusions concern the identification and legal consequences of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). The draft conclusions, dealing with identification and legal consequences, are primarily concerned with methodology. They do not attempt to address the content of individual peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). It should also be noted that the commentaries will refer to different materials to illustrate methodological approaches in practice. The materials referred to, as examples of practice, including views of States, serve to illustrate the methodology for the identification and consequences of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). They do not imply the agreement with, or endorsement of, the views expressed therein by the Commission.

(4) The draft conclusions are concerned primarily with the method for establishing whether a norm of general international law has the added quality of having a peremptory character (that is, being accepted and recognized by the international community of States as a whole as a norm from which no derogation is permitted and which can be modified only by a subsequent norm of general international law (jus cogens) having the same character). The draft conclusions are thus not concerned with the determination of the content of the peremptory norms themselves. The process of identifying whether a norm of international law is peremptory or not requires the application of the criteria developed in these draft conclusions.

(5) In addition to the identification of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), the draft conclusions also concern the legal consequences of such norms. The term “legal consequences” is used because it is broad. While there may be non-legal consequences of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), it is only the legal consequences that are the subject of the present draft conclusions. Moreover, individual peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) may have specific consequences that are distinct from the general consequences flowing from all peremptory norms. The present draft conclusions, however, are not concerned with such specific consequences, nor do they seek to determine whether individual peremptory norms have specific consequences. The draft conclusions only address general legal consequences of peremptory norms of general international law.

(6) The terms “jus cogens”, “peremptory norms” and “peremptory norms of general international law” are sometimes used interchangeably in State practice, international jurisprudence and scholarly writings.⁶⁹⁴ The Commission settled on the phrase “peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)” because it is clearer and is the phrase used in the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties (“1969 Vienna Convention”).⁶⁹⁵

(7) The phrase “peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)” also serves to indicate that the topic is concerned only with norms of general international law. Jus cogens norms in domestic legal systems, for example, do not form part of the topic. Similarly, norms of a purely bilateral or regional character are also excluded from the scope of the topic.

(8) The word “norm” is sometimes understood to have a broader meaning than other related words such as “rules” and “principles” and to encompass both. It is, however, to be noted that in some cases, the words “rules”, “principles” and “norms” can be used interchangeably. The Commission, in its 1966 draft articles on the law of treaties, used the word “norm” in draft article 50 which became article 53 of the 1969 Vienna Convention. However, in the commentaries, the Commission used the word “rules”.⁶⁹⁶ To be consistent with that Convention, which uses the word “norm” in both its articles 53 and 64, the word “norm” is retained.

Conclusion 2

Definition of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens)

A peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) is a norm accepted and recognized by the international community of States as a whole as a norm from which no derogation is permitted and which can be modified only by a subsequent norm of general international law (jus cogens) having the same character.

Commentary

(1) Draft conclusion 2 provides a definition of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). It is based upon article 53 of the 1969 Vienna Convention with modifications to fit the context of the draft conclusions. First, only the second sentence of article 53 of the 1969 Vienna Convention is reproduced. The first sentence, which concerns the invalidity of treaties, does not form part of the definition. It is rather a legal consequence of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), which is addressed in draft conclusion 10. Second, the phrase “[f]or the purposes of the present Convention” is omitted from the definition. As will be demonstrated below, the definition ⁶⁹⁴ For a discussion on nomenclature, see D. Costelloe, Legal Consequences of Peremptory Norms in International Law, Cambridge University Press, 2017, at pp. 11 et seq.

⁶⁹⁵ See, for example, article 53 of the 1969 Vienna Convention.

⁶⁹⁶ See draft article 50 of the draft articles on the law of treaties, Yearbook ... 1966, vol. II, p. 183, where the word “norm” is used. The commentaries, however, refer to “general rule[s] of international law ... having the character of jus cogens” and “rules of jus cogens” (ibid., p. 248, paras. (2)–(3) of the commentary to draft article 50).

in article 53, though initially used for the purposes of the 1969 Vienna Convention, has come to be accepted as a general definition which applies beyond the law of treaties. Finally, in keeping with the general approach in this topic, the Commission has decided to insert the phrase “jus cogens” in parentheses after “peremptory norm of general international law”.

(2) This formulation was chosen because it is the most widely accepted definition in the practice of States and in the decisions of international courts and tribunals. It is also commonly used in scholarly writings. States have generally supported the idea of proceeding on the basis of 1969 Vienna Convention.⁶⁹⁷ Decisions of national courts have generally also referred to article 53 when defining peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).⁶⁹⁸ Similarly, international courts and tribunals have used article 53 of the 1969 Vienna Convention as a basis when addressing peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).⁶⁹⁹ Article 53 of the 1969 Vienna Convention is also accepted as the general definition of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) in scholarly writings.⁷⁰⁰ While the formulation in article 53 of the 1969 Vienna

⁶⁹⁷ See, for example, the statement by the Czech Republic (A/C.6/71/SR.24, para. 72). See also the statements by Canada (A/C.6/71/SR.27, para. 9), Chile (A/C.6/71/SR.25, para. 101), China (A/C.6/71/SR.24, para. 89), the Islamic Republic of Iran (A/C.6/71/SR.26, para. 118) (“The aim of the Commission’s work on the topic was not to contest the two criteria established under article 53 On the contrary, the goal was to elucidate the meaning and scope of the two criteria”), and Poland (ibid., para. 56). See, further, the statement by Ireland (A/C.6/71/SR.27, para. 19) (“Her delegation agreed with the view that articles 53 and 64 of the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties should be central to work on the topic”).

⁶⁹⁸ See, for example, Al Shimari, et al. v. CACI Premier Technology, Inc., No. 1:08-cv-827 (LMB/JFA), Opinion of 22 March 2019, 2019 WL 1320052 (E.D. Va. 2019), at p. 26; Committee of United States Citizens Living in Nicaragua v. Reagan, Case No. 87-5053, Opinion of 14 October 1988, 859 F.2d 929 (D.C. Cir. 1988), at p. 940; Youssef Nada v. State Secretariat for Economic Affairs and Federal Department of Economic Affairs, Case No. 1A 45/2007, Administrative appeal judgment of 14 November 2007, Federal Supreme Court of Switzerland, BGE 133 II 450, para. 7.1; National Commissioner of The South African Police Service v. Southern African Human Rights Litigation Centre and Another, Case No. CC 02/14, Judgment of 30 October 2014, Constitutional Court of South Africa, [2014] ZACC 30, para. 35; Priebke, Erich s/ solicitud de extradición, Case No. 16.063/94, Judgment of 2 November 1995, Supreme Court of Argentina, para. 70; Bouzari v. Islamic Republic of Iran, Docket C38295, Decision of 30 June 2004, Court of Appeal for Ontario, 71 OR (3d) 675 (Ont CA), ILDC [International Law in Domestic Courts] 175 (CA 2004), para. 86; and Gabriel Orlando Vera Navarrete, EXP. No. 2798-04-HC/TC, Decision of 9 December 2004, Constitutional Tribunal of Peru, para. 8.

⁶⁹⁹ See, for example, Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 1996, p. 226, at p. 258, para. 83; Prosecutor v. Furundžija, Case No. IT-95-17/1-T, Judgment of 10 December 1998, Trial Chamber, International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, Judicial Reports 1998, at p. 571, para. 155; and Prosecutor v. Jelisić, Case No. IT-95-10-T, Judgment of 14 December 1999, Trial Chamber, International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, Judicial Reports 1999, pp. 431–433, para. 60. See also Jaime Córdoba Triviño, Case No. C-578/95, Sentence of 4 December 1995, Constitutional Tribunal of Colombia. See, especially, the separate opinion of Judge ad hoc Dugard in Armed Activities on the Territory of the Congo (New Application: 2002) (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Rwanda), Jurisdiction and Admissibility, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 2006, p. 6, at p. 88, para. 8.

⁷⁰⁰ See, for example, S. Knuchel, Jus Cogens: Identification and Enforcement of Peremptory Norms, Zurich, Schulthess, 2015, at p. 19 (“Given that Article 53 provides the only written legal definition of the effects of jus cogens ... as well as of the process by which such norms come into being ... it is the necessary starting point for analyzing this concept”); S. Kadelbach, “Genesis, function and identification of jus cogens norms”, Netherlands Yearbook of International Law 2015, vol. 46 (2016), pp. 147–172, at p. 166, noting that “treatises on jus cogens usually start” with article 53 of the 1969 Vienna Convention and, at p. 162, assessing enhanced responsibility and the erga omnes effects of jus cogens on the basis of article 53 of the 1969 Vienna Convention; and U. Linderfalk, “Understanding the jus cogens debate: the pervasive influence of legal positivism and legal idealism”, ibid., pp. 51–84, at p. 52. See also, generally, Costelloe (footnote 694 above), who, though never stating that article 53 of the 1969 Vienna Convention is the definition, certainly proceeds on that basis. Similarly, see L. Hannikainen, Peremptory Norms (Jus Cogens) in International Law: Historical Development, Criteria, Present Status, Helsinki, Finnish Lawyers’ Publishing Company, 1988, especially at pp. 5–

Convention is for “the purposes of the Convention”, it also applies in other contexts including in relation to State responsibility.⁷⁰¹ The Commission has, when addressing peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) in the context of other topics, also used the definition in article 53 of the 1969 Vienna Convention.⁷⁰² It is therefore appropriate for these draft conclusions to rely on article 53 for the definition of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).

(3) The definition of peremptory norms in article 53 contains two main elements. First, the norm in question must be a norm of general international law. Second, it must be accepted and recognized by the international community of States as a whole as one from which no derogation is permitted, and which can only be modified by a norm having the same character. These elements constitute the criteria for the identification of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) and are elaborated upon further in draft conclusions 4 to 9.

Conclusion 3

General nature of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)

Peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) reflect and protect fundamental values of the international community, are hierarchically superior to other rules of international law and are universally applicable.

Commentary

(1) Draft conclusion 3 describes the general nature of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). The general nature is described in terms of essential characteristics associated with peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). The draft conclusion is placed at the end of Part One in order to indicate that it provides a 12; and L. A. Alexidze, “Legal nature of jus cogens in contemporary international law”, Collected Courses of the Hague Academy of International Law, vol. 172 (1981), pp. 219–263, at p. 246.

⁷⁰¹ See T. Weatherall, Jus Cogens: International Law and Social Contract, Cambridge University Press, 2015, at pp. 6–7 (“Although the Vienna Convention concerns the law of treaties and binds only signatories ... Article 53 reflected a concept with legal effect beyond the treaty context. ... The contemporary practice of international and domestic judicial organs, to refer to Article 53 for any consideration of jus cogens, is consistent with this view of a concept existing outside the treaty context”); E. Santalla Vargas, “In quest of the practical value of jus cogens norms”, Netherlands Yearbook of International Law 2015, vol. 46 (2016), pp. 211–240, at pp. 223–224 (“However, the potential effects of jus cogens not only expand beyond treaty law but they even appear more significant in situations that are not concerned with treaty law”); and A. Cassese, “For an enhanced role of jus cogens”, in A. Cassese (ed.), Realizing Utopia: the Future of International Law, Oxford University Press, 2012, pp. 158–171, at p. 160 (“Fortunately states, national courts, and international judicial bodies have invoked peremptory norms with regard to areas other than treaty-making. By so doing, these entities have expanded the scope and normative impacts of peremptory norms” (emphasis in original)). See also H. Charlesworth and C. Chinkin, “The gender of jus cogens”, Human Rights Quarterly, vol. 15 (1993), pp. 63–76, at p. 63 (“A formal, procedural definition of the international law concept of jus cogens is found in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties”).

⁷⁰² See paragraph (5) of the commentary to article 26 of the draft articles on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, Yearbook ... 2001, vol. II (Part Two) and corrigendum, p. 85 (“The criteria for identifying peremptory norms of general international law are stringent. Article 53 of the 1969 Vienna Convention requires not merely that the norm in question should meet all the criteria for recognition as a norm of general international law ... but further that it should be recognized as having peremptory character by the international community of States as whole”). See also the Conclusions of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law: difficulties arising from the diversification and expansion of international law (A/CN.4/L.702), conclusion (32) (“A rule of international law may be superior to other rules on account of the importance of its content as well as the universal acceptance of its superiority. This is the case of peremptory norms of international law (jus cogens, [article 53 of the 1969 Vienna Convention]), that is, norms ‘accepted and recognized by the international community of States as a whole from which no derogation is permitted’”). See, further, the Report of the Study Group on the fragmentation of international law: difficulties arising from the diversification and expansion of international law (finalized by Martti Koskeniemi) (A/CN.4/L.682 and Corr.1 and Add.1), para. 375 (“The starting-point [for establishing the criteria] must be the formulation of article 53 itself, identifying jus cogens by reference to what is ‘accepted and recognized by the international community of States as a whole’”).

general orientation for the provisions that follow. A view was expressed, however, that such “characteristics” have an insufficient basis in international law, unnecessarily conflate the identification and effects of these norms, and risk being viewed as additional criteria for determining whether a specific peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) exists.

(2) The first characteristic referred to in draft conclusion 3 is that peremptory norms of general international law “reflect and protect fundamental values of the international community”. The Commission chose the words “reflect and protect” to underline the dual function that fundamental values play in relation to peremptory norms of general international law. The word “reflect” is meant to indicate that the fundamental value(s) in question provide, in part, a rationale for the peremptory status of the norm of general international law at issue. Further, the word “reflect” seeks to establish the idea that the norm in question gives effect to particular values. The word “protect” is meant to convey the effect of the peremptory norm on the value – that a specific peremptory norm serves to protect the value(s) in question. In some ways these are mutually reinforcing concepts. A value reflected by a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) will be protected by compliance with that norm.

(3) The characteristic that peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) reflect and protect fundamental values of the international community relates to the content of the norm in question. Already in 1951, before the adoption of the 1969 Vienna Convention or the 1966 draft articles on the law of treaties, the International Court of Justice had linked the prohibition of genocide, a prohibition today widely accepted and recognized as a peremptory norm, to fundamental values, noting that the prohibition was inspired by the commitment “to condemn and punish genocide as ‘a crime under international law’ involving a denial of the right of existence of entire human groups, a denial which shocks the conscience of mankind and results in great losses to humanity, and which is contrary to moral law and to the spirit and aims of the United Nations”.⁷⁰³

(4) The references in the Court’s Advisory Opinion on Reservations to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide to “the conscience of mankind” and “moral law” evoke fundamental values shared by the international community. In subsequent decisions, the International Court of Justice has reaffirmed this description of the underlying basis for the prohibition of genocide and, at the same time, affirmed the peremptory status of the prohibition of genocide.⁷⁰⁴ Moreover, in its 2007 judgment in the case concerning the Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the Court referred to peremptory norms along with “obligations which protect essential humanitarian values”, thus indicating a relationship between them.⁷⁰⁵ The connection between values and the peremptory character of norms has also been made by other international courts and tribunals.⁷⁰⁶

⁷⁰³ Reservations to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 1951, p. 15, at p. 23. See also P. Bisazza, “Les crimes à la frontière du jus cogens”, in L. Moreillon, et al. (eds.), Droit pénal humanitaire, Series II, vol. 4, Brussels, Bruylant, 2009, at p. 164, where she evokes, quoting Bassiouni, la conscience de l’humanité; and L. Boisson de Chazournes, “Commentaire”, in R. Huesa Vinaixa and K. Wellens (eds.), L’influence des sources sur l’unité et la fragmentation du droit international : travaux du séminaire tenu à Palma, les 20–21 Mai 2005, Brussels, Bruylant, 2006, at p. 76, referring to a conscience universelle.

⁷⁰⁴ See, for example, Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Serbia and Montenegro), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 2007, p. 43, at pp. 110–111, para. 161; and Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Croatia v. Serbia), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 2015, p. 3, at p. 46, para. 87.

⁷⁰⁵ Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Serbia and Montenegro) (see footnote above), p. 104, para. 147.

⁷⁰⁶ Prosecutor v. Furundžija (see footnote 699 above), p. 569, paras. 153–154, where the Tribunal expressly linked the status of the prohibition of torture as a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) to the “importance of the values it protects”, noting that “[c]learly, the jus cogens nature of the prohibition against torture articulates the notion that the prohibition has now become one of the most fundamental standards of the international community”. This holding was quoted with approval by the European Court of Human Rights in Al-Adsani v. the United Kingdom, Application

(5) The link between peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) and fundamental values has equally been recognized in the decisions of national courts.⁷⁰⁷ For example, in Siderman de Blake v. Republic of Argentina, the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit quoted with approval the statement that peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) are “derived from values taken to be fundamental by the international community”.⁷⁰⁸ The Constitutional Tribunal of Peru referred to the “extraordinary importance of the values underlying” jus cogens obligations.⁷⁰⁹ Similarly, in the Arancibia Clavel case, the Supreme Court of Argentina held that the purpose of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) was “to protect States from agreements concluded against some values and general interests of the international community of States as a whole”.⁷¹⁰

(6) The relationship between peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) and values is also accepted in scholarly writings. Kolb states that the idea that peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) are somehow connected with no. 35763/97, Judgment of 21 November 2001, Grand Chamber, European Court of Human Rights, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 2001-XI, para. 30. In the Case of Goiburú, et al. v. Paraguay (Judgment of 22 September 2006 on Merits, Reparations and Costs, Inter-American Court of Human Rights, Series C, No. 153, para. 128), the Court described offences prohibited by jus cogens as those that “harm essential values and rights of the international community”. See also Michael Domingues v. United States (Case 12.285, Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, Report No. 62/02 of 22 October 2002, para. 49), where that Commission linked peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) to “public morality” and, more importantly, stated that they “derive their status from fundamental values held by the international community”, noting that violations of jus cogens “shock the conscience of humankind”.

⁷⁰⁷ See, for example, Bayan Muna as represented by Representative Satur Ocampo et al. v. Alberto Romulo, in his capacity as Executive Secretary et al., Supreme Court of the Republic of the Philippines (2011), at p. 56 noting that jus cogens norms are “deemed ... fundamental to the existence of a just international order”. Kaunda and Others v. President of the Republic of South Africa & Others (Society for the Abolition of the Death Penalty in South Africa intervening as Amicus Curiae) 2005 (4) SA 235 (CC); Minister of Justice and Others v Southern African Litigation Centre and Others, where the Court states that it agrees with the following sentiment: “As State sovereignty is increasingly viewed to be contingent upon respect for certain values common to the international community, it is perhaps unsurprising that bare sovereignty is no longer sufficient to absolutely shield High officials from prosecution for jus cogens violations”. Alessi and Others v Germany and Presidency of the Council of Ministers of the Italian Republic (intervening), Referral to the Constitutional Court, Order No 85/2014, ILDC 2725 (IT 2014), 21 January 2014, Italy; Tuscany; Florence; Court of First Instance (Non è in contestazione la natura di crimine internazionale del fatto oggetto di causa e la sua potenzialità lesiva di diritti fondamentali della persona umana come consacrati nella Costituzione italiana e nella Carta dei diritti fondamentali dell’Unione Europea (2000/C 364/01). Anche considerato che nell’ordinamento interno, i diritti fondamentali della persona riconosciuti dalla Costituzione si saldano necessariamente con le norme di jus cogens poste a tutela dei diritti fondamentali della persona dal diritto internazionale venendo in rilievo i medesimi valori tendenzialmente universali di tutela della dignità della persona).

⁷⁰⁸ Siderman de Blake v. Republic of Argentina, United States Court of Appeals, 965 F.2d 699 (9th Cir 1992), p. 715. This decision was cited with approval by lower courts in the Ninth Circuit including: Estate of Hernandez-Rojas v. United States, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS136922 (SD Cal. 2013), at p. 13; Estate of Hernandez-Rojas v. United States, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS101385 (SD Cal. 2014), at p. 9; and Doe I v. Reddy, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS26120 (ND Cal 2003), at pp. 32 and 34. See also the Ninth Circuit’s opinion in Alvarez-Machain v. United States (331 F.3d 604 (9th Cir. 2003), p. 613. Although that decision was eventually overturned by the Supreme Court in Sosa v. Alvarez-Machain, et al. (542 U.S. 692 (2004)), the idea of peremptory norms reflecting values of the international community was itself not addressed by the Supreme Court.

⁷⁰⁹ 25% del número legal de Congresistas contra el Decreto Legislativo N° 1097, EXP. No. 0024-2010-PI/TC, Judgment of the Jurisdictional Plenary of 21 March 2011, Constitutional Tribunal of Peru, para. 53 (de la extraordinaria importancia de los valores que subyacen a tal [jus cogens] obligación (“of the extraordinary importance of the values that underlie [the jus cogens] obligation”)).

⁷¹⁰ Arancibia Clavel, Enrique Lautaro s/ homicidio calificado y asociación ilícita y otros, Case No. 259, Judgment of 24 August 2004, Supreme Court of Argentina, para. 29 (es proteger a los Estados de acuerdos concluidos en contra de algunos valores e intereses generales de la comunidad internacional de Estados en su conjunto).

fundamental values “is the absolutely predominant theory”.⁷¹¹ Hannikainen, describing the role of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), observes that “a legal community may find it necessary to establish peremptory norms for the protection of such overriding interests and values of the community itself”.⁷¹² Similarly, Pellet sees peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) as paving a way towards a more “moral value oriented public order”,⁷¹³ while Tomuschat describes them as “the class of norms that protect the fundamental values of the international community”.⁷¹⁴

(7) It will be noted from the discussion above that courts and scholarly writers have employed different terms to signify the relevance of values. For example, the phrases “fundamental values”⁷¹⁵ and “interests”,⁷¹⁶ or variations thereof, have been employed interchangeably. These different choices of words, however, are not mutually exclusive and they indicate the important normative and moral background of the norm in question.

(8) As a second characteristic, draft conclusion 3 states that peremptory norms of general international law are hierarchically superior to other norms of international law. The fact that peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) are hierarchically superior to other norms of international law is both a characteristic and a consequence of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). It is a consequence in that the identification of a norm as a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) has the effect that it will be superior to other norms. It is, however, also a characteristic since hierarchical superiority describes the nature of the peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).

⁷¹¹ R. Kolb, Peremptory International Law: Jus Cogens – a General Inventory, Oxford, Hart Publishing, 2015, at p. 32. H. Olasolo Alonso, A. Mateus Rugeles and A. Contreras Fonseca, “La naturaleza imperativa del principio ‘no hay paz sin justicia’ respecto a los máximos responsables del fenómeno de la lesa humanidad y sus consecuencias para el ámbito de actuación de la llamada ‘justicia de transición’”, Boletín mexicano de derecho comparado, vol. 49 (2016), pp. 135–171; C. Zelada, “Ius cogens y derechos humanos: luces y sombras para una adecuada delimitación de conceptos”, Agenda Internacional, vol. 8 (2002), pp. 129–156, at p. 139. A.A. Cançado Trindade, “Jus cogens: the determination and the gradual expansion of its material content in contemporary international case-law”, XXXV Course of International Law organized by the OAS Inter-American Juridical Committee in Rio de Janeiro (August 2008), at pp. 6 and 12; K. Hossain, “The concept of jus cogens and the obligation under the U.N. Charter”. Santa Clara Journal of International Law, vol. 3 (2005), pp. 72–98, at p. 73; L. Henkin, “International law and the inter-State sys”, Collected Courses of the Hague Academy of International Law, vol. 216 (1989), at p. 60; J.R. Argés, “‘Ius cogens’: descripción, valoración y propuestas de aplicación actual de un tópico jurídico clásico”, doctoral dissertation, Universidade de Santiago de Compostela, 2017, at p. 273; A. de Beer, Peremptory Norms of General International Law (Jus Cogens) and the Prohibition of Terrorism (Leiden, Brill, 2019), pp. 79–83. E. Petrič, “Principles of the Charter of the United Nations: Jus cogens?” Czech Yearbook of Public and Private International Law, vol. 17 (2016).

⁷¹² Hannikainen (see footnote 700 above), at p. 2.

⁷¹³ A. Pellet, “Comments in response to Christine Chinkin and in defense of jus cogens as the best bastion against the excesses of fragmentation”, Finnish Yearbook of International Law, vol. 17 (2006), pp. 83–90, at p. 87.

⁷¹⁴ C. Tomuschat, “The Security Council and jus cogens”, in E. Cannizzaro (ed.), The Present and Future of Jus Cogens, Sapienza Università Editrice, 2015, at p. 8, who describes jus cogens as “the class of norms that protect the fundamental values of the international community”. See also H. Ruiz Fabri, “Enhancing the rhetoric of jus cogens”, European Journal of International Law, vol. 23, No. 4 (2012), p. 1049, at p. 1050; M. den Heijer and H. van der Wilt “Jus cogens and the humanization and fragmentation of international law”, Netherlands Yearbook of International Law, vol. 46 (2015), pp. 3–21, at p. 15; and D. Shelton, “Sherlock Holmes and the mystery of jus cogens”, ibid., pp. 23–50, especially from p. 42.

⁷¹⁵ Tomuschat, “The Security Council and jus cogens” (see footnote 714 above), at p. 8. See also Siderman de Blake v. Republic of Argentina (footnote 708 above), at p. 715, where the United States Court of Appeal referred to “values taken to be fundamental by the international community” and the Constitutional Tribunal of Peru in 25% del número legal de Congresistas, referring to “extraordinary importance of the values” (see footnote 709 above).

⁷¹⁶ Hannikainen (see footnote 700 above), at p. 2, referring to “overriding interests”. See, also, Arancibia Clavel (footnote 710 above), where the Supreme Court of Argentina referred to “general interests of the international community” as the underlying source of peremptory norms.

(9) International courts and tribunals have often referred to the hierarchical superiority of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). The International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, for example, held that a feature of the prohibition of torture “relates to the hierarchy of rules in the international normative order” and that the prohibition “has evolved into a peremptory norm or jus cogens, that is, a norm that enjoys a higher rank in the international hierarchy than treaty law and even ‘ordinary’ customary rules”.⁷¹⁷ The Inter-American Court of Human Rights has similarly accepted the hierarchical superiority of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).⁷¹⁸ In Kadi v. Council and Commission, the Court of First Instance of the European Communities described peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) as a “body of higher rules of public international law”.⁷¹⁹ The European Court of Human Rights, in Al-Adsani v. the United Kingdom, has similarly described a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) as “a norm that enjoys a higher rank in the international hierarchy than treaty law and even ‘ordinary’ customary rules”.⁷²⁰

(10) The recognition of the hierarchical superiority of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) can also be seen in the practice of States. For example, the High Court of Zimbabwe, in Mann v. Republic of Equatorial Guinea, described peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) as those norms “endowed with primacy in the hierarchy of rules that constitute the international normative order”.⁷²¹ Courts in the United States have similarly recognized the hierarchical superiority of norms of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). In Siderman de Blake v. Republic of Argentina, the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit stated that peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) were those norms “deserving of the highest status in international law”.⁷²² Various terms denoting hierarchical superiority have been used by different national courts to describe peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). They have been held to have “the highest hierarchical position amongst all other customary norms and principles”,⁷²³ to be “not only above treaty law, but over all other sources of law”,⁷²⁴ and to be norms which “prevail over both customary international law

⁷¹⁷ Prosecutor v. Furundžija (see footnote 699 above), at p. 569, para. 153.

⁷¹⁸ García Lucero, et al. v. Chile, Judgment 28 August 2013, Inter-American Court of Human Rights, Series C, No. 267, para. 123, note 139, quoting with approval Prosecutor v. Furundžija (see footnote 699 above). See also Michael Domingues v. United States (footnote 706 above), para. 49, describing jus cogens norms as being derived from a “superior order of legal norms”.

⁷¹⁹ Yassin Abdullah Kadi v. Council of the European Union and Commission of the European Communities, Case No. T-315-01, Judgment of 21 September 2005, Second Chamber, Court of First Instance of the European Communities, [2005] ECR II-3649, para. 226. See also Hassan v. Council of the European Union and Commission of the European Communities, Case No. T-49/04, Judgment of 12 July 2006, Second Chamber, Court of First Instance of the European Communities, para. 92.

⁷²⁰ Al-Adsani v. the United Kingdom (see footnote 706 above), para. 60.

⁷²¹ Mann v. Republic of Equatorial Guinea, Case No. 507/07, Judgment of 23 January 2008, High Court of Zimbabwe, [2008] ZWHHC 1.

⁷²² Siderman de Blake v. Republic of Argentina (see footnote 708 above), at p. 717.

⁷²³ Bayan Muna as represented by Representative Satur Ocampo, et al. v. Alberto Romulo, in his capacity as Executive Secretary, et al., Case G.R. No. 159618, Judgment of 1 February 2011, Supreme Court of the Republic of the Philippines, ILDC 2059 (PH2011), at para. 92. See also Certain Employees of Sidhu & Sons Nursery Ltd., et al., Case Nos. 61942, 61973, 61966, 61995, Decision of 1 February 2012, BCLRB No. B28/2012, para. 44, where the British Columbia Labour Relations Board (Canada), identified peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) as enjoying a “higher rank in the international hierarchy than treaty law and even ‘ordinary’ customary rules”. See also R (on the application of Al Rawi and Others) v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and Another, Case No. C1/2006/1064, Judgment of 12 October 2006, England and Wales Court of Appeal (Civil Division), [2006] EWCA Civ 1279; and Regina v. Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate and Others: Ex Parte Pinochet Ugarte (No. 3), Decision of 24 March 1999, England, House of Lords, [2000] 1 A.C. 147, p. 198.

⁷²⁴ Julio Héctor Simón y otros s/privación ilegítima de la libertad, Case No. 17.768, Judgment of 14 June 2005, Supreme Court of Argentina, para. 48 (que se encuentra no sólo por encima de los tratados sino incluso por sobre todas las fuentes del derecho (“which is not only above treaties but even above all sources of law”). See also Julio Lilo Mazzeo y otros s/rec. de casación e inconstitucionalidad, Judgment of 13 July 2007, Supreme Court of Argentina, para. 15 (jus cogens “is the highest source of international law” (se trata de la más alta fuente del derecho internacional)).

and treaties”.⁷²⁵ States have also, in their statements, referred to the hierarchical superiority of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).⁷²⁶

(11) The hierarchical superiority of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) was recognized in the conclusions of the work of the Commission’s Study Group on the fragmentation of international law.⁷²⁷ This characteristic is also generally recognized in the writings of scholars.⁷²⁸

(12) Finally, with respect to the third characteristic, draft conclusion 3 provides that peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) are universally applicable. The universal applicability of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) means that they are binding on all subjects of international law that they address. The idea that peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) are universally applicable, like that of their hierarchical superiority, flows from non-derogability. The fact that a norm is non-derogable, by extension, means that it is applicable to all since States cannot derogate from it by creating their own special rules that conflict with it. The universal application of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) is both a characteristic and a consequence of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).

(13) In its Advisory Opinion on Reservations to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the International Court of Justice referred to “the universal character of the condemnation of genocide”, which it considered to be a consequence of the fact that genocide “shocks the conscience of mankind and results in ⁷²⁵ Mani Kumari Sabbithi, et al. v. Major Waleed KH N.S. Al Saleh, et al., 605 F. Supp 2d 122 (United States District Court for the District of Columbia 2009), p. 129. See also Mario Luiz Lozano v. the General Prosecutor for the Italian Republic, Case No. 31171/2008, Appeal Judgment of 24 July 2008, First Criminal Division, Supreme Court of Cassation, Italy, p. 6 (dandosi prevalenza al principio di rango più elevato e di jus cogens (“priority should be given to the principle of higher rank and of jus cogens”)).

⁷²⁶ See, for example, the statements by the Netherlands (A/C.6/68/SR.25, para. 101) (“Jus cogens was hierarchically superior within the international law system, irrespective of whether it took the form of written law or customary law”); and the United Kingdom (Official Records of the United Nations Conference on the Law Treaties, First Session, Vienna, 26 March–24 May 1968, Summary records of the plenary meetings and of the meetings of the Committee of the Whole (A/CONF.39/11), 53rd meeting, para. 53) (“in a properly organized international society there was a need for rules of international law that were of a higher order than the rules of a merely dispositive nature from which States could contract out”).

⁷²⁷ Conclusion (32) of the Conclusions of the work of the Study Group on the fragmentation of international law (see footnote 702 above), at p. 182, para. 251 (“[a] rule of international law may be superior to other rules on account of the importance of its content as well as the universal acceptance of its superiority. This is the case of peremptory norms of international law (jus cogens)”). See, further, the Report of the Study Group on the fragmentation of international law (footnote 702 above).

⁷²⁸ See, for support in the literature for the hierarchical superiority of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), A. Orakhelashvili, Peremptory Norms in International Law, Oxford, 2006, at p. 8; G. M. Danilenko, “International jus cogens: issues of law-making”, European Journal of International Law, vol. 2, No. 1 (1991), pp. 42–65, at p. 42; and W. Conklin, “The peremptory norms of the international community”, ibid., vol. 23, No. 3, pp. 837–861, at p. 838 (“[T]he very possibility of a peremptory norm once again suggests a hierarchy of international law norms with peremptory norms being the ‘fundamental standards of the international community’ at the pinnacle”). See also M. M. Whiteman, “Jus cogens in international law, with a projected list”, Georgia Journal of International and Comparative Law, vol. 7, No. 2 (1977), pp. 609–626, at p. 609; and M. W. Janis, “The nature of jus cogens”, Connecticut Journal of International Law, vol. 3, No. 2 (Spring 1988), pp. 359–363, at p. 359. Tomuschat, for example, describes it as a certainty that peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) are superior to other norms. See C. Tomuschat, “Reconceptualizing the debate on jus cogens and obligations erga omnes: concluding observations”, in C. Tomuschat and J.-M. Thouvenin (eds.), The Fundamental Rules of the International Legal Order: Jus Cogens and Obligations Erga Omnes, Leiden, Martinus Nijhoff, 2006, at p. 425 (“One thing is certain, however: the international community accepts today that there exists a class of legal precepts which is hierarchically superior to ‘ordinary’ rules of international law”). See also Cassese (footnote 701 above), at p. 159. For a contrary view, see Kolb (footnote 711 above), at p. 37, suggesting that the language of hierarchy should be avoided and that the focus should be on voidness since the former concept – of hierarchy – leads to confusion and misunderstanding.

great losses to humanity, and [which] is contrary to moral law”.⁷²⁹ The universal character of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) was affirmed by the judgments of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.⁷³⁰ The Inter-American Court of Human Rights has described peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) as being “applicable to all States” and as norms that “bind all States”.⁷³¹ Similarly, in Michael Domingues v. United States, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights has determined that peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) “bind the international community as a whole, irrespective of protest, recognition or acquiescence”.⁷³²

(14) The universal character of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) is further reflected in decisions of national courts. In Tel-Oren et al. v. Libyan Arab Republic, et al., the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia referred to peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) as “universal and obligatory norms”.⁷³³ In Youssef Nada v. State Secretariat for Economic Affairs, the Swiss Federal Supreme Court described peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) as those norms that were “binding on all subjects of international law”.⁷³⁴ The view that peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) have a universal character is also reflected in the writings of scholars.⁷³⁵

(15) The characteristic of universal applicability of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) itself has two implications. First, the persistent objector rule or doctrine is not applicable to peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). This aspect is considered further in draft conclusion 14. As described in paragraph (7) of the commentary to draft conclusion 1, a second implication of the universal application of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) is that such norms do not apply on a regional or bilateral basis.⁷³⁶

⁷²⁹ Reservations to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (see footnote 703 above), at p. 23. This language has been reaffirmed by the International Court of Justice in recent judgments. See, for example, the judgments referred to in footnote 699 above.

⁷³⁰ See, for example, Prosecutor v. Furundžija (footnote 699 above), at p. 571, para. 156. See also Prosecutor v. Jelišić (footnote 699 above), p. 399 and pp. 431–433, para. 60.

⁷³¹ Juridical Condition and Rights of Undocumented Migrants, Advisory Opinion OC-18/03 of 17 September 2003, requested by the United Mexican States, Inter-American Court of Human Rights, Series A, No. 18, p. 113, paras. 4–5.

⁷³² Michael Domingues v. United States (see footnote 706 above), at para. 49.

⁷³³ Tel-Oren, et al. v. Libyan Arab Republic, et al., Judgment of 3 February 1984, 726 F.2d 774 (D.C. Cir. 1984), 233 U.S.App. D.C. 384. See also Smith v. Socialist People’s Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Judgment of 26 November 1996, 101 F.3d 239 (2nd. Cir. 1996), at p. 242, in which the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit stated that peremptory norms “do not depend on the consent of individual states, but are universally binding by their very nature”.

⁷³⁴ Youssef Nada v. State Secretariat for Economic Affairs (see footnote 698 above), para. 7.

⁷³⁵ See, for example, Conklin (footnote 728 above); C. Rozakis, The Concept of Jus Cogens in the Law of Treaties, Amsterdam, North-Holland Publishing Company, 1976, at p. 78; G. Gaja, “Jus cogens beyond the Vienna Convention”, in Collected Courses of the Hague Academy of International Law, vol. 172 (1981), pp. 271–289, at p. 283; G. M. Danilenko, Law-Making in the International Community, Dordrecht, Martinus Nijhoff Publishers, 1993, at p. 211; Alexidze (footnote 700 above); P-M. Dupuy and Y. Kerbrat, Droit international public, 11th ed., Paris, Précis Dalloz, 2012, at p. 322 (la cohésion de cet ensemble normatif exige la reconnaissance par tous ses sujets d’un minimum de règles imperatives (“the cohesion of this set of standards requires recognition by all its subjects of a minimum of mandatory rules”)) (emphasis in original); A. Rohr, La responsabilidad internacional del Estado por violación al jus cogens, Buenos Aires, SGN Editora, 2015, at p. 6; D. Dubois, “The authority of peremptory norms in international law: State consent or natural law?”, Nordic Journal of International Law, vol. 78 (2009), pp. 133–175, at p. 135 (“A jus cogens or peremptory norm ... is applicable to all States regardless of their consenting to it”); and M. Saul, “Identifying jus cogens norms: the interaction of scholars and international judges”, Asian Journal of International Law, vol. 5 (2014), pp. 26–54, at p. 31 (“Jus cogens norms are supposed to be binding on all states”).

⁷³⁶ States were virtually unanimous on this point: see, for example, Finland (on behalf of the Nordic countries) (A/C.6/73/SR.24, para. 126); Greece (A/C.6/73/SR.27, para. 9); Malaysia (ibid., para. 104); Portugal (A/C.6/73/SR.26, para. 119); South Africa (A/C.6/73/SR.27, para. 46); Thailand

(16) The characteristics contained in draft conclusion 3 are themselves not criteria for the identification of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). The criteria for the identification of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) are contained in Part Two of the draft conclusions. Though themselves not criteria, the existence of the characteristics contained in draft conclusion 3 may provide an indication of the peremptory status of a particular norm of general international law. In other words, evidence that a norm reflects and protects fundamental values of the international community of States as a whole, is hierarchically superior to other norms of international law and is universally applicable, may serve to support or confirm the peremptory status of a norm. A view was expressed in the Commission that the difference between “criteria” and “characteristics” is obscure, as is the proposition that such “characteristics” provide supplementary evidence.

Part Two

Identification of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)

Conclusion 4

Criteria for the identification of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens)

To identify a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), it is necessary to establish that the norm in question meets the following criteria:

- (a) it is a norm of general international law; and
- (b) it is accepted and recognized by the international community of States as a whole as a norm from which no derogation is permitted and which can be modified only by a subsequent norm of general international law having the same character.

Commentary

(1) Draft conclusion 4 sets out the criteria for the identification of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). The criteria are drawn from the definition of peremptory norms contained in article 53 of the 1969 Vienna Convention, which was reproduced in draft conclusion 2. Such criteria must be shown to be present in order to establish that a norm has a peremptory character.

(2) The chapeau of the draft conclusion states “[t]o identify a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), it is necessary to establish that the norm in question meets the following criteria”. The phrase “it is necessary to establish” indicates that the criteria must be shown to be present and that they should not be assumed to exist. It is thus not sufficient to point to the importance or the role of a norm in order to show the peremptory character of that norm. Rather, “it is necessary to establish” the existence of the criteria enumerated in the draft conclusion.

(3) On the basis of the definition contained in draft conclusion 2, draft conclusion 4 sets forth two criteria. First, the norm in question must be a norm of general international law. This criterion is derived from the phrase “norm of general international law” in the definition of peremptory norms (jus cogens) and is the subject of draft conclusion 5. Second, the norm must be accepted and recognized by the international community of States as a whole as a norm from which no derogation is permitted, and which can be modified only by a norm having the same character. It bears pointing out that this second criterion, though composed of various elements, is a single composite criterion. This criterion is the subject of draft conclusions 6 to 9. The two criteria are cumulative: they are both necessary conditions for the establishment of the peremptory character of a norm of general international law.

(4) The language of article 53 of the 1969 Vienna Convention is complex and has given rise to different interpretations. The phrase “and which can be modified only by a subsequent norm of general international law having the same character” could, for example, be viewed as a separate criterion.⁷³⁷ Yet, the essence of the second criterion is the acceptance and recognition by the international community of States as a whole, not just that the norm is one from which no derogation is permitted, but also that it can be modified only by a subsequent norm of general international law having the same character. Hence, the non-derogation and modification elements are not themselves criteria but rather, form an integral part of the “acceptance and recognition” criterion. It is in this sense that the second criterion, though composed of several elements, constitutes a single criterion.

(A/C.6/73/SR.26, para. 96); the United Kingdom (A/C.6/73/SR.22, para. 84); and the United States (A/C.6/73/SR.29, para. 34).

(5) Alternatively, it has been suggested that the phrase “accepted and recognized” qualifies “general international law” rather than the non-derogation and modification clauses. Seen from this perspective, article 53 would have three criteria for proving that a norm has peremptory character: (a) the norm must be a norm of general international law that is accepted and recognized (as a norm of general international law) by the international community of States as a whole; (b) it must be a norm from which no derogation is permitted; and (c) it must be a norm that can only be modified by a subsequent peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). Such an interpretation, however, raises at least two problems. First, it would render the first criterion tautologous, since “general international law” ought to be generally accepted and/or recognized by the international community to begin with. Second, in that form the second and third criteria would not be criteria but rather a consequence of peremptoriness and a description of how peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) can be modified, respectively.

(6) Based on the foregoing, the two cumulative criteria in draft conclusion 4 imply a two-step approach to the identification of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). First, evidence that the norm in question is a norm of general international law is required. Second, the norm must be shown to be accepted and recognized by the international community of States as a whole as having a peremptory character. This two-step approach was aptly described by the Commission in the commentaries to the draft articles on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts:

The criteria for identifying peremptory norms of general international law are stringent. Article 53 of the 1969 Vienna Convention requires not merely that the norm in question meet all the criteria for recognition as a norm of general international law, binding as such, but further that it should be recognized as having peremptory character by the international community of States as a whole.⁷³⁸

Conclusion 5

Bases for peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)

1. Customary international law is the most common basis for peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).
2. Treaty provisions and general principles of law may also serve as bases for peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).

⁷³⁷ But see Knuchel (footnote 700 above), at pp. 49–136. See also the statement by the Islamic Republic of Iran (A/C.6/71/SR.26, para. 118), where the two criteria identified are said to be, first, a norm recognized by the international community of States as a whole as a norm from which no derogation was permitted, and, second, a norm that could be modified only by a subsequent jus cogens norm.

⁷³⁸ Paragraph (5) of the commentary to article 26 of the draft articles on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, Yearbook ... 2001, vol. II (Part Two) and corrigendum, p. 85 (emphasis added). See also Rivier, Droit international public, 2nd ed., Paris, Presses universitaires de France, 2013, at p. 566 (Ne peut accéder au rang de règle impérative qu'une provision déjà formalisée en droit positif et universellement acceptée comme règle de droit (“Only a provision already formalized in positive law and universally accepted as law can achieve the rank of peremptory norm”). See also U. Linderfalk, “The creation of jus cogens – making sense of article 53 of the Vienna Convention”, Heidelberg Journal of International Law, vol. 71 (2011), pp. 359–378, at p. 371 (“by ‘the creation of a rule of jus cogens’ I mean, not the creation of a rule of law, but rather the elevation of a rule of law to a jus cogens status”).

Commentary

(1) Draft conclusion 5 concerns the bases of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). It addresses the first criterion specified in draft conclusion 4 to identify peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), namely that the norm in question must be a norm of “general international law”. The draft conclusion is composed of two parts. The first paragraph deals with customary international law as the basis for peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), while the second paragraph addresses treaty provisions and general principles of law as possible bases of such norms.

(2) The Study Group on fragmentation of international law established by the Commission observed that “there is no accepted definition of ‘general international law’”.⁷³⁹ The meaning of general international law will always be context-specific.⁷⁴⁰ In some contexts, “general international law” could be construed in contradistinction to lex specialis.⁷⁴¹ In the context of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), however, the term “general international law” is not a reference to lex generalis or law other than lex specialis. Rather, the word “general” in “norms of general international law”, in the context of peremptory norms, refers to the scope of applicability of the norm in question. Norms of general international law are thus those norms of international law that, in the words of the International Court of Justice, “must have equal force for all members of the international community”.⁷⁴²

(3) The words “basis” in the first paragraph and “bases” in the second paragraph of draft conclusion 5 are to be understood flexibly and broadly. They are meant to capture the range of ways that various sources of international law may give rise to the emergence of a peremptory norm of general international law.

(4) The first paragraph of draft conclusion 5 states that customary international law, which refers to a general practice accepted as law (opinio juris), is the most common basis for peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). This is because customary international law is the most obvious manifestation of general international law.⁷⁴³ This position is borne out by State practice which confirms that customary international law is ⁷³⁹ Report of the Study Group on the fragmentation of international law: difficulties arising from the diversification and expansion of international law (A/CN.4/L.702), para. 14 (10), note 11.

⁷⁴⁰ Ibid. See also footnote 667 to paragraph (2) of the commentary to draft conclusion 1 of the draft conclusions on the identification of customary international law, Report of the International Law Commission on the work of its Seventieth Session (A/73/10) (“general international law” is used in various ways (not always clearly specified) including to refer to rules of international law of general application, whether treaty law or customary international law or general principles of law.)

⁷⁴¹ See, for example, Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua (Nicaragua v. United States of America), Merits, I.C.J. Reports 1986, p. 14, at pp. 137–138, para. 274. See also Gabčíkovo-Nagymaros Project (Hungary/Slovakia), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1997, p. 7, at p. 76, para. 132.

⁷⁴² North Sea Continental Shelf, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1969, p. 3, at pp. 38–39, para. 63.

⁷⁴³ See Cassese (footnote 701 above), at p. 164 (“The second question amounts to asking by which means an international tribunal should ascertain whether a general rule or principle of international law has acquired the status of a peremptory norm. Logically, this presupposes the existence of such a customary rule or principle”) (emphasis in original); G. Cahin, La coutume internationale et les organisations internationales : l’incidence de la dimension institutionnelle sur le processus coutumier, Paris, Pédone, 2001, at p. 615, who states that customary international law is the normal, if not exclusive, means of formation of jus cogens norms (voie normale et fréquente sinon exclusive). See also Rivier (footnote 738 above), at p. 566 (Le mode coutumier est donc au premier rang pour donner naissance aux règles destinées à alimenter le droit impératif (“Customary international law is thus a primary source of rules that will form the basis of peremptory law”). See, further, J.E. Christófolo, Solving Antinomies between Peremptory Norms in Public International Law, Zurich, Schulthess, 2016, p. 115 (“As the most likely source of general international law, customary norms would constitute ipso facto and ipso iure a privileged source of ius cogens norms”); and A. Bianchi, “Human rights and the magic of jus cogens”, European Journal of International Law, vol. 19 (2008), p. 491, at p. 493 (“The possibility that jus cogens could be created by treaty stands in sharp contrast to the view that peremptory norms can emerge only from customary law”). See, for a contrary view, Janis (footnote 728 above), at p. 361.

the most common basis for peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).⁷⁴⁴ The Supreme Court of Argentina, for example, recognized that peremptory norms relative to war crimes and crimes against humanity emerged from rules of customary international law already in force.⁷⁴⁵ Similarly, the Constitutional Tribunal of Peru stated that peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) referred to “customary international norms under the auspices of an opinio juris seu necessitatis”.⁷⁴⁶ In Bayan Muna v. Alberto Romulo, the Supreme Court of the Philippines defined jus cogens as “the highest hierarchical position among all other customary norms and principles”.⁷⁴⁷ Similarly, in The Kenya Section of the International Commission of Jurists v. The Attorney-General and Others, the High Court of Kenya determined the “duty to prosecute international crimes” to be both a rule of customary international law and a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).⁷⁴⁸ In Kazemi Estate v. Islamic Republic of Iran, the Supreme Court of Canada described peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) as a “higher form of customary international law”.⁷⁴⁹ In Siderman de Blake v. Republic of Argentina, the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit described peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) as “an elite subset of the norms recognized as customary international law”.⁷⁵⁰ That court also noted that, in contrast to ordinary rules of customary international law, jus cogens “embraces customary laws considered binding on all nations”.⁷⁵¹ In Buell v. Mitchell, the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit noted that “[s]ome customary norms of international law reach a ‘higher status’”, namely that of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).⁷⁵² In determining that the prohibition of the death penalty was not a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), the court made the following observation: ⁷⁴⁶ 25% del número legal de Congresistas (see footnote 709 above), para. 53 (Las normas de ius cogens parecen pues encontrarse referidas a normas internacionales consuetudinarias que bajo el auspicio de una opinio iuris seu necessitatis (“jus cogens norms seem like they refer more to international customary norms than to opinio juris seu necessitatis”).

⁷⁴⁴ For statements by States, see the statement by Pakistan at the thirty-fourth session of the General Assembly (A/C.6/34/SR.22, para. 8) (“The principle of the non-use of force, and its corollary, were jus cogens not only by virtue of Article 103 of the Charter [of the United Nations], but also because they had become norms of customary international law recognized by the international community”). See also the statements by the United Kingdom (A/C.6/34/SR.61, para. 46) and Jamaica (A/C.6/42/SR.29, para. 3) (“The right of peoples to self-determination and independence was a right under customary international law, and perhaps even a peremptory norm of general international law”).

⁷⁴⁵ Arancibia Clavel (see footnote 710 above), para. 28.

⁷⁴⁷ Bayan Muna v. Alberto Romulo (see footnote 723 above), para. 92.

⁷⁴⁸ The Kenya Section of the International Commission of Jurists v. the Attorney-General and Others, Miscellaneous Criminal Application 685 of 2010, Judgment of 28 November 2011, High Court of Kenya, [2011] eKLR, p. 14.

⁷⁴⁹ Kazemi Estate v. Islamic Republic of Iran, File No. 35034, Appeal decision of 10 October 2014, Supreme Court of Canada, 2014 SCC 62, [2014] 3 S.C.R. 176, at p. 249, para. 151. Germany v. Milde (Max Josef), Case No. 1072/2009, Appeal Judgment of 13 January 2009, First Criminal Section, Supreme Court of Cassation, Italy, ILDC 1224 (IT 2009), para. 6 (“customary rules aiming to protect inviolable human rights did not permit derogation because they belonged to peremptory international law or jus cogens”).

⁷⁵⁰ Siderman de Blake v. Republic of Argentina (see footnote 708 above), at p. 715, citing Committee of United States Citizens Living in Nicaragua v. Reagan (see footnote 698 above), at p. 940.

⁷⁵¹ Ibid. This contrast between “ordinary” rules of customary international law and jus cogens – suggesting the latter constitutes extraordinary rules of customary international law – is often based on the decision of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia in Prosecutor v. Furundžija (see footnote 699 above), at p. 569, para. 153, where a similar distinction is drawn. It has been mentioned, with approval, in several decisions, including decisions of the courts of the United Kingdom. See, for example, Regina v. Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate and Others: Ex Parte Pinochet Ugarte (No. 3) (footnote 723 above), at p. 198. See also R (on the application of Al Rawi and Others) (ibid.).

⁷⁵² Buell v. Mitchell, 274 F.3d 337 (6th Cir. 2001), at pp. 372–373.

Moreover, since the abolition of the death penalty is not a customary norm of international law, it cannot have risen to the level that the international community as a whole recognizes it as jus cogens, or a norm from which no derogation is permitted.⁷⁵³

(5) The jurisprudence of the International Court of Justice equally provides strong evidence of the basis of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) in customary international law. In the case concerning Questions relating to the Obligation to Prosecute or Extradite, the Court recognized the prohibition of torture as “part of customary international law” that “has become a peremptory norm (jus cogens)”.⁷⁵⁴ Similarly, the Court’s description of “many [of the] rules of humanitarian law” as constituting “intransgressible principles of international customary law” suggests that peremptory norms – referred to here as “intransgressible principles” – have a customary basis.⁷⁵⁵

(6) Other international courts and tribunals have also accepted customary international law as the basis for peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).⁷⁵⁶ The International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, for example, has noted that the prohibition of torture is a “norm of customary international law” and that it “further constitutes a norm of jus cogens”.⁷⁵⁷ In Prosecutor v. Furundžija, that Tribunal described peremptory norms as those that “enjoy a higher rank in the hierarchy of international law than treaty law or even ‘ordinary’ customary rules”.⁷⁵⁸ Similarly, in Prosecutor v. Jelisić, the Tribunal stated that “[t]here can be absolutely no doubt” that the prohibition of genocide in the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide falls “under customary international law” and is now “on the level of jus cogens”.⁷⁵⁹

(7) While customary international law is the most common basis for the emergence of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), other sources listed in Article 38, paragraph 1, of the Statute of the International Court of Justice may also form the basis of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) to the extent that they can be regarded as norms of general international law. The second paragraph of draft conclusion 5 captures this idea by stating that “[t]reaty provisions and general principles of law may also serve as bases for peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)”. The words “may also” are meant to indicate that it is not impossible for provisions of a treaty and general principles of law to form the basis of peremptory norms of general international law.

(8) The phrase “general principles of law” in the second paragraph of draft conclusion 5 refers to general principles of law in the sense of Article 38, paragraph 1 (c), of the Statute of the International Court of Justice. It is appropriate to refer to the possibility of general principles of law forming the basis of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).⁷⁶⁰ General principles of law are part of general international law since they have a ⁷⁵³ Ibid., at p. 373.

⁷⁵⁴ Questions relating to the Obligation to Prosecute or Extradite (Belgium v. Senegal), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 2012, p. 422, at p. 457, para. 99.

⁷⁵⁵ Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons (see footnote 699 above), at p. 257, para. 79.

⁷⁵⁶ See, for example, “Las Dos Erres” Massacre v. Guatemala, Judgment of 24 November 2009, Inter-American Court of Human Rights, Series C, No. 211, at p. 41, para. 140.

⁷⁵⁷ Prosecutor v. Delalić, et al., Case No. IT-96-21-T, Judgment of 16 November 1998, Trial Chamber, International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, at para. 454.

⁷⁵⁸ Prosecutor v. Furundžija (see footnote 699 above), at p. 569, para. 153.

⁷⁵⁹ Prosecutor v. Jelisić (see footnote 699 above), at pp. 431–433, para. 60.

⁷⁶⁰ While there is little practice in support of general principles of law as a basis for peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), the following cases, among others, may be considered in this connection: Prosecutor v. Jelisić (footnote 699 above), at pp. 431–433, para. 60, where the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, having accepted that the prohibition of genocide was a norm of jus cogens, stated that the principles underlying the prohibition were “principles ... recognized by civilised nations”. The Inter-American Court of Human Rights determined the right to equality to be a peremptory norm of general international law flowing from its status as a general principle of law in its advisory opinion on the Juridical Condition and Rights of Undocumented Migrants (see footnote 731 above), at p. 99, para. 101: “Accordingly, this Court considers that the principle of equality before the law, equal protection before the law and non-

general scope of application with equal force for all members of the international community.⁷⁶¹ In the context of the interpretation of treaties under article 31, paragraph 3 (c), of the 1969 Vienna Convention, the conclusions of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law distinguished between the application of treaty law on the one hand, and of general international law on the other.⁷⁶² The latter, according to the Commission, consists of both “customary international law and general principles of law”.⁷⁶³ There is, moreover, support in writings for general principles of law as a source of peremptory norms of general international law.⁷⁶⁴ The view was expressed, however, that there was insufficient support from either the position of States or international jurisprudence to support the proposition that peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) may be based on general principles of law.

(9) Treaties are an important source of international law, as provided for in Article 38, paragraph 1 (a) of the Statute of the International Court of Justice. The second paragraph of draft conclusion 5 also identifies treaty provisions as a possible basis for peremptory norms of general international law. The phrase “treaty provisions” is used instead of “treaties” to indicate that what is at issue are the one or more norms contained in the treaty rather than the treaty itself. Treaties, in most cases, are not “general international law” since they do not usually have a general scope of application with “equal force for all members of the international community”.⁷⁶⁵ There is, however, support in scholarly writings that provisions in treaties can form the basis of the peremptory norms of international law (jus cogens).⁷⁶⁶ While recognizing the special character of the Charter of the United Nations, it discrimination belongs to jus cogens, because the whole legal structure of national and international public order rests on it and it is a fundamental principle that permeates all laws.” See also the statement by the Islamic Republic of Iran (A/C.6/71/SR.26, para. 120): “The general principles of law to which [A]rticle 38 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice referred were the best normative foundation for norms of jus cogens”.

⁷⁶¹ See North Sea Continental Shelf (footnote 742 above), at pp. 38–39, para. 63, where the Court described general international law as rules that, “by their very nature, must have equal force for all members of the international community.”

⁷⁶² Conclusions of the Study Group on the fragmentation of international law (see footnote 727 above), at paras. 20–21.

⁷⁶³ Ibid.

⁷⁶⁴ See, for example, Knuchel (footnote 700 above), at p. 52 (“general principles [of law] may be elevated to jus cogens if the international community of States as a whole accepts and recognizes them as such”); Shelton, “Sherlock Holmes and the mystery of jus cogens” (footnote 714 above), at pp. 30–34; A. A. Cançado Trindade, “Jus cogens: the determination and the gradual expansion of its material content in contemporary international case-law”, in Organization of American States, Inter-American Juridical Committee, XXXV Curso de Derecho Internacional, 2008, at p. 27. See also Weatherall (footnote 701 above), at p. 133; and T. Kleinlein, “Jus cogens as the ‘highest law’? Peremptory norms and legal hierarchies”, Netherlands Yearbook of International Law, vol. 46 (2016), p. 173, at p. 195 (“a peremptory norm must first become general international law i.e. customary international law or general principles of law pursuant to Article 38(1) of the [Statute of the International Court of Justice]”). See also Conklin (footnote 728 above), at p. 840; O. M. Dajani, “Contractualism in the law of treaties”, Michigan Journal of International Law, vol. 34 (2012), p. 1, at p. 60; R. Nieto-Navia, “International peremptory norms (jus cogens) and international humanitarian law”, in L. Chand Vorah, et al. (eds.), Man’s Inhumanity to Man: Essays on International Law in Honour of Antonio Cassese, The Hague, 2003, p. 595, at pp. 613 et seq. (“One can state generally that norms of jus cogens can be drawn generally from the following identified sources of international law: (i) General treaties ... and (ii) General principles of law recognized by civilized nations”); Orakhelashvili (footnote 728 above), at p. 126; and Santalla Vargas (footnote 701 above), at p. 214 (“jus cogens derives from customary law and general principles of international law”).

⁷⁶⁵ North Sea Continental Shelf (see footnote 742 above), at pp. 38–39, para. 63 (“for, speaking generally, it is a characteristic of purely conventional rules and obligations that, in regard to them, some faculty of making unilateral reservations may, within certain limits, be admitted; – whereas this cannot be so in the case of general or customary international law rules and obligations which, by their very nature, must have equal force for all members of the international community”). See also Bianchi (footnote 743 above), at p. 493 (“The possibility that jus cogens could be created by treaty stands in sharp contrast to the view that peremptory norms can emerge only from customary law”).

⁷⁶⁶ G.I. Tunkin, “Is general international law customary law only?”, European Journal of International Law, vol. 4 (1993), at p. 534, especially p. 541 (“I believe that international lawyers should accept is noteworthy that in the commentary to draft article 50 of the 1966 draft articles on the law of treaties, the Commission identified “the law of the Charter [of the United Nations] concerning the prohibition of the use of force” as a “conspicuous example of a rule of international law having the character of jus cogens”.⁷⁶⁷ The role of treaties as an exceptional basis for peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) may be understood as a consequence of the relationship between treaty rules and customary international law as described by the International Court of Justice in North Sea Continental Shelf cases.⁷⁶⁸ In that case, the Court observed that a treaty rule can codify (or be declaratory of) an existing general rule of international law,⁷⁶⁹ or the conclusion of a treaty rule can help crystallize an emerging general rule of international law,⁷⁷⁰ or that a treaty rule can, after adoption, come to reflect a general rule on the basis of subsequent practice.⁷⁷¹ This general approach can also be seen in judgments of other international courts and tribunals.⁷⁷²

(10) The phrase “accepted and recognized” has a particular relevance for the sources which can serve as a basis for peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). The text “accepted and recognized by the international community of States as a whole” was adopted at the United Nations Conference on the Law of Treaties on the basis of a joint proposal of Finland, Greece and Spain with regard to what later became article 53 (“recognized by the international community”),⁷⁷³ to which the Drafting Committee at the Conference inserted the word “accepted”. As explained by the Chairperson of the Drafting that general international law now comprises both customary and conventional rules of international law”). See, specifically in the context of jus cogens, G. I. Tunkin, “Jus cogens in contemporary international law”, The University of Toledo Law Review, vol. 1971, Nos. 1–2 (Fall–Winter 1971), p. 107, at p. 116 (“principles of jus cogens consist of ‘rules which have been accepted either expressly by treaty or tacitly by custom ...’. Many norms of general international law are created jointly by treaty and custom”). See also Knuchel (footnote 700 above), at p. 50 (“Contemporary international law comprises, in the words of the [International Court of Justice], ‘instruments of a universal or quasi-universal character,’ and nothing precludes future conventions from creating universally binding norms which could be elevated to jus cogens”). See also Nieto-Navia (footnote 764 above), at p. 613 (“One can state generally that norms of jus cogens can be drawn generally from the following identified sources of international law: (i) General treaties ... and (ii) General principles of law recognized by civilized nations”). See however, Weatherall (footnote 701 above), at pp. 125–126; Hannikainen (footnote 700 above), at p. 92; E. J. Criddle and E. Fox-Decent, “A fiduciary theory of jus cogens”, Yale Journal of International Law, vol. 34 (2009), p. 331. See, further, Orakhelashvili (footnote 728 above), at p. 113 (“The propensity for academics to place emphasis on custom seems to follow from the general acknowledgment of the unsuitability of treaties to create peremptory norms”); and U. Linderfalk, “The effect of jus cogens norms: whoever opened Pandora’s Box, did you ever think about the consequences?”, European Journal of International Law, vol. 18 (2007), p. 853, at p. 860.

⁷⁶⁷ Paragraph (1) of the commentary to article 50 of the draft articles on the law of treaties (see footnote 696 above), vol. II, p. 247.

⁷⁶⁸ North Sea Continental Shelf (see footnote 742 above). See also draft conclusion 11 of the draft conclusions on the identification of customary international law.

⁷⁶⁹ North Sea Continental Shelf (see footnote 742 above), at p. 38, para. 61.

⁷⁷⁰ Ibid., at pp. 38–41, paras. 61–69.

⁷⁷¹ Ibid., at pp. 41–43, paras. 70–74. See also Margellos and Others v. Federal Republic of Germany, Case No. 6/2002, Petition for Cassation, Judgment of 17 September 2002, Special Supreme Court of Greece, para. 14 (“the provisions contained in the ... Hague Regulations attached to the Hague Convention IV of 1907 have become customary rules of international law (jus cogens)”).

⁷⁷² See for example, Prosecutor v. Tolimir, Case No. IT-05-88/2-T, Judgment of 12 December 2012, Trial Chamber II, International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, at para. 733 (“These provisions of the [Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide] are widely accepted as customary international law rising to the level of jus cogens”); and Questions Relating to the Obligation to Prosecute or Extradite (see footnote 754 above). See also the statement by Mr. Ago at the 828th meeting of the Commission in 1966, Yearbook ... 1966, vol. I (Part One), p. 37, para. 15 (“Even if a rule of jus cogens originated in a treaty, it was not from the treaty as such that it derived its character but from the fact that, even though derived from the treaty ... , it was already a rule of general international law”).

⁷⁷³ Official Records of the United Nations Conference on the Law of Treaties, First and Second Sessions, 26 March–24 May 1968 and 9 April–22 May 1969, vol. III, Documents of the Conference, p. 174, document A/CONF.39/C.1/L.306 and Add.1 and 2.

Committee, this was done because Article 38 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice includes both the words “recognized” and “accepted”; “recognized” was used in connection with conventions and treaties and general principles of law, while “accepted” was used in connection with customary international law.⁷⁷⁴

Conclusion 6
Acceptance and recognition

1. The requirement of “acceptance and recognition” as a criterion for identifying a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) is distinct from acceptance and recognition as a norm of general international law.

2. To identify a norm as a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), there must be evidence that such a norm is accepted and recognized as one from which no derogation is permitted and which can only be modified by a subsequent norm of general international law having the same character.

Commentary

(1) The second criterion for the identification of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) is that the norm in question must be recognized by the international community of States as a whole as a norm from which no derogation is permitted and which can only be modified by a subsequent norm having the same character. As stated in paragraph (4) of the commentary to draft conclusion 4, this is a single criterion composed of different elements. One element indicates that for a norm of general international law to be peremptory, the international community of States as whole must accept and recognize the peremptory character of that norm. The emphasis in this criterion is thus on “acceptance and recognition”. The other elements of the criterion indicate two aspects of that recognition and acceptance. First, they indicate what must be accepted and recognized, namely that the norm is one from which no derogation is permitted and that it can only be modified by a norm having the same character. Second, they indicate who must do the accepting and recognizing, namely the international community of States as a whole. Draft conclusion 7 addresses this latter aspect.

(2) The first paragraph of draft conclusion 6 seeks to make clear that the acceptance and recognition referred to in the draft conclusion is distinct from the acceptance and recognition required for other rules of international law. In other words, the “acceptance and recognition” addressed in draft conclusion 6 is not the same as, for example, acceptance as law (opinio juris), which is an element for the identification of customary international law. The acceptance and recognition referred to in draft conclusion 6 is qualitatively different. Acceptance as law (opinio juris) addresses the question whether States accept a practice as a rule of law and is a constitutive element of customary international law. Recognition as a general principle of law addresses the question whether a principle has been recognized as provided for in Article 38, paragraph 1 (c), of the Statute of the International Court of Justice. Acceptance and recognition, as a criterion of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), concerns the question whether the international community of States as a whole recognizes a rule of international law as having peremptory character.

(3) The second paragraph explains what is meant by the acceptance and recognition required to elevate a norm of general international law to the status of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). It states that the norm in question must be accepted and recognized as one from which no derogation is permitted, and which can be modified only by a subsequent norm having the same character. This implies that in order to show that a norm is a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), it is necessary to provide evidence that the norm is accepted and recognized as having the qualities mentioned, in other words that it is a norm from which no derogation is permitted and that can only be modified by a subsequent norm having the same character. Although draft conclusion 6 requires evidence of recognition and acceptance of two elements, it is not necessary to provide evidence showing first recognition and, separately, acceptance. It is sufficient to show, in general, the “acceptance and recognition” of the norm of general international law as being peremptory in nature.

⁷⁷⁴ Ibid., First Session, Summary records of the plenary meetings and of the meetings of the Committee of the Whole, Summary record of the eightieth meeting of the Committee of the Whole, p. 471 at para. 4.

(4) The word “evidence” is used to indicate that it is not sufficient merely to assert that a norm is accepted and recognized by the international community of States as a whole as one from which no derogation is permitted. It is necessary to substantiate such a claim by means of providing evidence. The evidence that may be relied upon is addressed in draft conclusions 8 and 9.

(5) This framework of acceptance and recognition by the international community of States as a whole is based on the generally accepted interpretation of article 53 of the 1969 Vienna Convention.⁷⁷⁵

Conclusion 7

International community of States as a whole

1. It is the acceptance and recognition by the international community of States as a whole that is relevant for the identification of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).
2. Acceptance and recognition by a very large majority of States is required for the identification of a norm as a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens); acceptance and recognition by all States is not required.
3. While the positions of other actors may be relevant in providing context and for assessing acceptance and recognition by the international community of States as a whole, these positions cannot, in and of themselves, form a part of such acceptance and recognition.

Commentary

(1) As already indicated in draft conclusion 6, the second criterion for the peremptory character of a norm is that the norm in question must be accepted and recognized as having a peremptory character. Draft conclusion 7 is concerned with the question of whose acceptance and recognition is relevant for the identification of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). It is worth recalling that the Commission itself, when adopting draft article 50 of its 1966 draft articles on the law of treaties, had not included the element of recognition and acceptance by the international community of States as a whole, stating only that a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) is one “from which no derogation is permitted”.⁷⁷⁶ Rather, this element was added by States in the course ⁷⁷⁵ See Committee of United States Citizens Living in Nicaragua (footnote 698 above), at p. 940 (“Finally, in order for such a customary norm of international law to become a peremptory norm, there must be a further recognition by ‘the international community ... as a whole [that this is] a norm from which no derogation is permitted’”); and Michael Domingues v. United States (footnote 706 above), at para. 85 (“Moreover, the Commission is satisfied, based upon the information before it, that this rule has been recognized as being of a sufficiently indelible nature to now constitute a norm of jus cogens, a development anticipated by the Commission in its Roach and Pinkerton decision”). See also Prosecutor v. Simić, Case No. IT-95-9/2-S, Sentencing Judgment of 17 October 2002, Trial Chamber, International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, at para. 34. See, for discussion, J. Vidmar, “Norm conflicts and hierarchy in international law: towards a vertical international legal system?”, in E. de Wet and J. Vidmar (eds.), Hierarchy in International Law: the Place of Human Rights, Oxford, 2011, p. 26. See also C. Costello and M. Foster, “Non-refoulement as custom and jus cogens? Putting the prohibition to the test”, Netherlands Yearbook of International Law, vol. 46 (2016), p. 273, at p. 281 (“to be jus cogens, a norm must meet the normal requirements for customary international law ... and furthermore have that additional widespread endorsement as to its non-derogability”); and A. Hameed, “Unravelling the mystery of jus cogens in international law”, British Yearbook of International Law, vol. 84 (2014), p. 52, at p. 62. See, further, G. A. Christenson, “Jus cogens: guarding interests fundamental to international society”, Virginia Journal of International Law, vol. 28 (1987–1988), p. 585, at p. 593 (“The evidence would also need to demonstrate requisite opinio juris that the obligation is peremptory, by showing acceptance of the norm’s overriding quality”).

⁷⁷⁶ See article 50 of the draft articles on the law of treaties, (footnote 696 above), p. 247.

of the 1968–1969 United Nations Conference on the Law of Treaties leading to the adoption of the 1969 Vienna Convention. However, even during the deliberations in the Commission, the link between peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) and the acceptance and recognition of the “international community of States” had been expressed by some members of the Commission.⁷⁷⁷

(2) The first paragraph of draft conclusion 7 states that it is the acceptance and recognition by the international community of States as a whole that is relevant. This paragraph seeks to make clear that it is the position of States that is relevant and not that of other actors. While there have been calls for the inclusion of other actors whose acceptance and recognition might be pertinent for the establishment of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens),⁷⁷⁸ the current state of international law retains States as the entities whose acceptance and recognition is relevant. In the context of the draft articles on the law of treaties between States and international organizations or between international organizations, the Commission considered using the phrase “international community as a whole” and thus excluding the words “of States” from the phrase.⁷⁷⁹ However, on reflection, the Commission decided that “in the present state of international law, it is States that are called upon to establish or recognize peremptory norms”.⁷⁸⁰

(3) State practice and the decisions of international courts and tribunals have continued to link the elevation of norms of general international law to peremptory status with State acceptance and recognition. The International Criminal Court, for example, has stated that a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) requires recognition by States.⁷⁸¹ The International Court of Justice, likewise, in the case concerning Questions Relating to the Obligation to Prosecute or Extradite, determined the peremptory character of the prohibition of torture on the basis of instruments developed by States.⁷⁸² Domestic courts have similarly continued to link the establishment of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) with State recognition. For example, in determining that the prohibition of the death penalty was not a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit stated, in Buell v. Mitchell, that “only sixty-one countries, or approximately thirty-two-percent of countries, had completely abolished the use of the death penalty”.⁷⁸³ While peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) continue to be linked to notions of the conscience of ⁷⁷⁷ See the statement by Mr. Luna, summary records, 828th meeting (footnote 772 above), at para. 34 (“[jus cogens] was positive law created by States, not as individuals but as organs of the international community”).

⁷⁷⁸ See, for example, Canada (A/C.6/71/SR.27, para. 9), indicating that “it would be beneficial for the Commission ... to enlarge the idea of the acceptance and recognition of peremptory norms to include other entities, such as international and non-governmental organizations”.

⁷⁷⁹ See paragraph (3) of the commentary to draft article 53 of the draft articles on the law of treaties between States and international organizations or between international organizations, Yearbook ... 1982, vol. II (Part Two), p. 56. See also, in the context of the current topic, the statement by Canada (footnote above).

⁷⁸⁰ Paragraph (3) of the commentary to draft article 53 of the draft articles on the law of treaties between States and international organizations or between international organizations.

⁷⁸¹ Prosecutor v. Katanga, Case No. ICC-01/04-01/07-34-05-tENG, Decision on the Application for the Interim Release of Detained Witnesses of 1 October 2013, Trial Chamber II, International Criminal Court, at para. 30 (“peremptoriness [of the principle of non-refoulement] finds increasing recognition among States”).

⁷⁸² Questions Relating to the Obligation to Prosecute or Extradite (see footnote 754 above), at para. 99. The Court cites, amongst others, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Geneva Conventions for the protection of war victims, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, General Assembly resolution 3452 (XXX) of 9 December 1975, and domestic legislation.

⁷⁸³ See, for example, Buell v. Mitchell (footnote 752 above), at p. 373. See also On Application of Universally Recognized Principles and Norms of International Law and of International Treaties of the Russian Federation by Courts of General Jurisdiction, Ruling No. 5 of 10 October 2003 as amended on 5 March 2013, decision of the Plenary Session of the Supreme Court of the Russian Federation, at para. 1 (“The universally recognized principles of international law should be understood as the basic imperative norms of international law, accepted and recognized by the international community of states as a whole, deviation from which is inadmissible”).

mankind in practice and scholarly writings,⁷⁸⁴ even then the material advanced to illustrate recognition of the norms as peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) remains acts and practice generated by States, including within international organizations, such as treaties and General Assembly resolutions.

(4) Although draft conclusion 7 states that it is the acceptance and recognition of States that is relevant for determining whether a norm has a peremptory character, that does not mean that other actors do not play a role. Other actors may provide context and may contribute to the assessment of the acceptance and recognition by the international community of States as a whole. The subsidiary role of other actors has been recognized by the Commission in other topics. In its draft conclusions on the identification of customary international law, the Commission stated that it is “primarily ... the practice of States that contributes to the formation, or expression, of rules of customary international law”, while noting that “[i]n certain cases the practice of international organizations also contributes to the formation, or expression, of rules of customary international law”. It went on to note that the conduct of non-State actors, even though not practice for such purposes, “may be relevant when assessing the practice” of States.⁷⁸⁵ Likewise, in the topic “Subsequent agreements and subsequent practice in relation to the interpretation of treaties”, the Commission concluded that the conduct of non-State actors did not constitute practice for the purposes of article 31 of the 1969 Vienna Convention but that it may “be relevant when assessing the subsequent practice of parties to a treaty”.⁷⁸⁶ Acts and practice of international organizations may provide evidence for the acceptance and recognition of States when determining whether a norm has a peremptory character.⁷⁸⁷ Ultimately, however, the positions of entities other than States are not, of themselves, sufficient to establish the acceptance and recognition required for the elevation of a norm of general international law to peremptory status. This consideration is reflected in the third paragraph of draft conclusion 7.

(5) The second paragraph of draft conclusion 7 seeks to explain what is meant by “as a whole”. It states that what is required is the acceptance and recognition by a very large majority of States. As explained by the Chairperson of the Drafting Committee during the United Nations Conference on the Law of Treaties, the words “as a whole” are meant to indicate that it was not necessary for the peremptory nature of the norm in question “to be accepted and recognized ... by all States” and that it would be sufficient if “a very large majority did so”.⁷⁸⁸ This sense is also captured by the phrase “community of States” as opposed to simply “States”. The combination of the phrases “as a whole” and “community of States” serves to emphasize that it is States as a collective or community, that must ⁷⁸⁴ Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Croatia v. Serbia) (see footnote 704 above), at p. 46, para. 87; and A. Cançado Trindade, International Law for Humankind: Towards a New Jus Gentium (I), Leiden, 2010, at p. 316 (“It is my view that there is, in the multicultural world of our times, an irreducible minimum, which, in so far as international law-making is concerned, rests on its ultimate material source: human conscience”).

⁷⁸⁵ Draft conclusion 4 of the draft conclusions on the identification of customary international law.

⁷⁸⁶ Draft conclusion 5 of the draft conclusions on subsequent agreements and subsequent practice in relation to the interpretation of treaties (A/73/10, chap. IV).

⁷⁸⁷ Reservations to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (footnote 703 above), p. 23: “The origins of the Convention show that it was the intention of the United Nations to condemn and punish genocide The Genocide Convention was therefore intended by the General Assembly and by the contracting parties to be definitely universal in scope”; see also conclusion 12 of the conclusions on the identification of customary international law.

⁷⁸⁸ Mr. Yasseen, Chairperson of the Drafting Committee, Official Records of the United Nations Conference on the Law of Treaties, First Session ... (see footnote 726 above), 80th meeting, at para. 12. See also E. de Wet, “Jus cogens and obligations erga omnes”, in D. Shelton (ed.) The Oxford Handbook of International Human Rights Law, Oxford, 2013, p. 541, at p. 543 (“This threshold for gaining peremptory status is high, for although it does not require consensus among all states ... it does require the acceptance of a large majority of states”). See, further, Christófolo (footnote 743 above), at p. 125 (“[The formation of peremptory norms reflects] a common will represent[ing] the consent of an overwhelming majority of States. Neither one State nor a very small number of States can obstruct the formative process of peremptory norms”).

accept and recognize the non-derogability of a norm for it to be a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).

(6) The Commission considered that acceptance and recognition by a simple “majority” of States was not sufficient to establish the peremptory status of a norm. Rather, the majority had to be very large. Determining whether there was a very large majority of States accepting and recognizing the peremptory status of a norm was not, however, a mechanical exercise in which the number of States is to be counted. The acceptance and recognition by the international community of States as a whole requires that the acceptance and recognition be across regions, legal systems and cultures.⁷⁸⁹ The view was expressed that in the light of importance of State consent and the extraordinarily strong legal effect of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), the recognition and acceptance of the “overwhelming majority of States”, “virtually all States”, “substantially all States” or “the entire international community of States as a whole” was required.⁷⁹⁰

Conclusion 8

Evidence of acceptance and recognition

1. Evidence of acceptance and recognition that a norm of general international law is a peremptory norm (jus cogens) may take a wide range of forms.
2. Such forms of evidence include, but are not limited to: public statements made on behalf of States; official publications; government legal opinions; diplomatic correspondence; legislative and administrative acts; decisions of national courts; treaty provisions; and resolutions adopted by an international organization or at an intergovernmental conference.

Commentary

(1) To identify a norm as a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), it is necessary to show the acceptance and recognition by the international community of States as a whole of the non-derogability of such a norm. As implied in the second paragraph of draft conclusion 7, this requires that evidence of acceptance and recognition must be adduced. Draft conclusion 8 concerns the types of evidence necessary to identify that the international community of States as a whole accepts and recognizes that a norm has a peremptory character. Other subsidiary materials which may be relevant for the identification of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) is addressed in draft conclusion 9.

(2) The first paragraph of draft conclusion 8 is a general statement. It provides that evidence of acceptance and recognition may take a wide range of forms. In its judgment in Questions Relating to the Obligation to Prosecute or Extradite, the International Court of Justice relied on a variety of materials as evidence of the peremptory character of the prohibition of torture.⁷⁹¹ It should be recalled that what is at stake is the acceptance and recognition of the international community of States as a whole. Therefore, any material capable of expressing or reflecting the views of States would be relevant as evidence of acceptance and recognition.

(3) The second paragraph of draft conclusion 8 describes the forms of materials that may be used as evidence that a norm is a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). In keeping with the statement above that evidence of acceptance and recognition may take various forms, the second paragraph of draft conclusion 8 states that the forms of evidence “include, but are not limited to”. The list contained in the second paragraph of draft conclusion 8 is therefore not a closed list. Other forms of evidence not mentioned in the second paragraph of draft conclusion 8, if reflecting or expressing the acceptance and recognition of States, may be adduced in support of the peremptory character of a norm.

⁷⁸⁹ See Michael Domingues v. United States (footnote 706 above), at para. 85 (“The acceptance of this norm crosses political and ideological boundaries and efforts to detract from this standard have been vigorously condemned by members of the international community as impermissible under contemporary human rights standards”).

⁷⁹⁰ See, for example, Continental Shelf (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya/Malta), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1985, p. 13, at p. 30, para. 27.

⁷⁹¹ Questions Relating to the Obligation to Prosecute or Extradite (see footnote 754 above), para. 99.

(4) It will be noted that the forms of evidence listed in paragraph 2 of draft conclusion 8 are similar to those provided for in paragraph 2 of conclusion 10, which concerns forms of evidence of acceptance of law (opinio juris), of the Commission's conclusions on the identification of customary international law.⁷⁹² This similarity is because the forms of evidence identified are those from which, as a general matter, the positions, opinions and views of States can be gleaned. The potential uses of these materials for the purposes of satisfying the acceptance and recognition criterion for peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), on one hand, and their use for the purposes of the identification of customary international law must be distinguished, on the other hand. For the former, the materials must establish acceptance and recognition by the international community of States as a whole that the norm in question is one from which no derogation is permitted, while for the latter the materials are used to assess whether States accept the norm as a rule of customary international law.

(5) The non-exhaustive list of forms of evidence in the second paragraph of draft conclusion 8 have in common that they are materials expressing or reflecting the views of States. These materials are the result of processes capable of revealing the positions and views of States. Treaties and resolutions adopted by States in international organizations or at intergovernmental conferences may be an obvious example of such materials.⁷⁹³ Decisions of national courts may also be a reflection of the views of States and have been relied upon in the determination of the peremptory character of norms.⁷⁹⁴ Legislative and administrative measures are yet another way by which States express their views and may ⁷⁹² Conclusion 10 of the conclusions on the identification of customary international law. General Assembly resolution 73/203 of 20 December 2018, annex.

⁷⁹³ In the case concerning Questions Relating to the Obligation to Prosecute or Extradite (see footnote 754 above), para. 99, the International Court of Justice referred to both treaties ("the 1949 Geneva Conventions for the protection of war victims; the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights of 1966") and resolutions ("the Universal Declaration of Human Rights of 1948; General Assembly resolution 3452/30 of 9 December 1975 on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment"), in expressing its recognition of the prohibition of torture as a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). See also Prosecutor v. Mucić, Judgment, the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, 16 November 1998 (IT-96-21-T) and Prosecutor v. Delalić, et al. (see footnote 757 above), at para. 454, relying on the 1950 Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (European Convention on Human Rights), the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Punishment or Treatment, and the 1969 American Convention on Human Rights ("Pact of San José, Costa Rica"). See also Prosecutor v. Furundžija (footnote 699 above), at p. 563, para. 144. In reaching its decision on the peremptory character of the prohibition of the execution of individuals under the age of 18, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights in Michael Domingues v. United States (see footnote 706 above), at para. 85, relied on the ratification by States of treaties such as the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the 1989 Convention on the rights of the child, and the 1969 American Convention on Human Rights ("Pact of San José, Costa Rica"), which it said were "treaties in which this proscription is recognized as non-derogable". See also the separate opinion of Vice-President Ammoun in Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia (South West Africa) Notwithstanding Security Council Resolution 276 (1970), Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 1971, p. 16, at p. 79, relying on General Assembly and Security Council resolutions for the conclusion that the right to self-determination is a peremptory norm. See also the Written Observations Submitted by the Government of the Solomon Islands to the International Court of Justice on the request by the World Health Organization for an Advisory Opinion on the Legality of the Use of Nuclear Weapons in View of their Effects on Human Health and the Environment, at pp. 39–40, para. 3.28 ("It is quite normal in international law for the most common and the most fundamental rules to be reaffirmed and repeatedly incorporated into treaties").

⁷⁹⁴ See, for example, Prosecutor v. Furundžija (footnote 699 above), at p. 569, note 170. See also Al-Adsani v. the United Kingdom (footnote 706 above), at paras. 60–61, where the Court relied, inter alia, on Regina v. Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate and Others: Ex Parte Pinochet Ugarte (No. 3) (footnote 723 above) and "other cases before ... national courts" in its assessment of the peremptory character of the prohibition of torture.

thus also provide evidence of the peremptory character of a norm of general international law.⁷⁹⁵ States also routinely express their views about the peremptory character of particular norms through public statements and statements in international fora.⁷⁹⁶

(6) In addition to the caveat that the forms of evidence in the second paragraph of draft conclusion 8 are non-exhaustive, it should also be recalled that such materials must speak to whether the norm has a peremptory character. The question is not whether a particular norm has been reflected in these materials but, rather, whether the materials establish the acceptance and recognition of the international community of States as a whole that the norm in question is one from which no derogation is permitted. These materials are not, individually, conclusive of the peremptory character of a norm. The materials have to be weighed and assessed together, in their context, in order to determine whether they evince an acceptance and recognition of the international community of States as a whole of the peremptory character of the norm in question.

Conclusion 9

Subsidiary means for the determination of the peremptory character of norms of general international law

1. Decisions of international courts and tribunals, in particular of the International Court of Justice, are a subsidiary means for determining the peremptory character of norms of general international law.
2. The works of expert bodies established by States or international organizations and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations may also serve as subsidiary means for determining the peremptory character of norms of general international law.

Commentary

(1) To identify a norm as being a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), it is necessary to provide evidence that the international community of States as a whole accepts and recognizes the said norm as one from which no derogation is permitted and which can only be modified by a subsequent norm of general international law having the same character. As explained in draft conclusion 8, the forms of evidence relevant for this purpose are materials expressing or reflecting the views of States. Other materials, not reflecting the views of States, may also be relevant as subsidiary means for the determination of the peremptory character of a norm. Draft conclusion 9 concerns some such subsidiary means. It is important to emphasize that the word “subsidiary” in this context is not meant to diminish the importance of such materials, but is rather aimed at expressing the idea that those materials facilitate the identification of “acceptance and recognition” but do not, themselves, constitute such acceptance and recognition.⁷⁹⁷ Draft conclusion 9 concerns such other materials.

⁷⁹⁵ In coming to the conclusion that the prohibition of torture was of a peremptory character, the International Court of Justice in the case concerning Questions Relating to the Obligation to Prosecute or Extradite (see footnote 754 above), at para. 99, referred to the fact that the prohibition had “been introduced into the domestic law of almost all States”. Similarly, in its decision on the prohibition of the execution of individuals below the age of 18, the Inter-American Commission in Michael Domingues v. United States (see footnote 706 above), at para. 85, took account of the fact that States had introduced relevant amendments to their national legislation.

⁷⁹⁶ See, for example, on aggression: Ghana (Official Records of the United Nations Conference on the Law Treaties, First Session ... (footnote 726 above), 53rd meeting, para. 15); the Netherlands (A/C.6/SR.781, para. 2); Uruguay (Official Records of the United Nations Conference on the Law Treaties, First Session ... (footnote 726 above), 53rd meeting, para. 48); Japan (S/PV.2350); Belarus (A/C.6/73/SR.26, para. 90); and Mozambique (A/C.6/73/SR.28, para. 3). In this respect, in the case concerning Questions Relating to the Obligation to Prosecute or Extradite (see footnote 754 above), at para. 99, the International Court of Justice referred to the fact that “acts of torture are regularly denounced within national and international fora” in asserting the peremptory character of the prohibition of torture.

⁷⁹⁷ See also paragraph (2) of the commentary to conclusion 13 of the draft conclusions on customary international law (footnote 740 above) (“The term ‘subsidiary means’ denotes the ancillary role of

(2) The first paragraph of draft conclusion 9 provides that decisions of international courts and tribunals are a subsidiary means for determining the peremptory character of norms of general international law. This provision mirrors Article 38, paragraph 1 (d), of the Statute of the International Court of Justice, which provides, inter alia, that judicial decisions are a “subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law”. It is partly for that reason that the first paragraph of draft conclusion 9 uses the words “means for determining” instead of “identifying” which has more often been resorted to in the present draft conclusions. While Article 38, paragraph 1 (d), of the Statute of the International Court of Justice refers to “judicial decisions”, which includes both decisions of international courts and decisions of national courts, the first paragraph of draft conclusion 9 refers only to decisions of international courts and tribunals. In addition to serving as subsidiary means under Article 38, paragraph 1 (d), of the Statute of the International Court of Justice, decisions of national courts may also constitute primary evidence under draft conclusion 8.

(3) There is an abundance of examples of decisions of international courts relying on other decisions of international courts and tribunals. As an example, the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, in Prosecutor v. Furundžija, determined that the prohibition of torture was a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) on the basis of, inter alia, the extensiveness of the prohibition including the fact that States are prohibited “from expelling, returning or extraditing” a person to a place where they may be subject to torture.⁷⁹⁸ To demonstrate the extensiveness of this prohibition, the Court referred to judgments of, inter alia, the European Court of Human Rights.⁷⁹⁹ The judgment of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia in Prosecutor v. Furundžija has itself often been referred to, to illustrate the peremptory status of the prohibition of torture.⁸⁰⁰ The Special Tribunal for Lebanon in Prosecutor v. Ayyash, et al., concluded that “[t]he principle of legality (nullum crimen sine lege) ... [is] so frequently upheld by international criminal courts with regard to international prosecution of crimes that it is warranted to hold that by now it has the status of a peremptory norm (jus cogens)”.⁸⁰¹ The Special Tribunal for Lebanon, in El Sayed, determined that the right to access to justice has “acquired the status of a peremptory norm (jus cogens)” based on, inter alia, jurisprudence of both national and international courts.⁸⁰² The decision in El Sayed provides a particularly apt illustration of the manner in which decisions of international courts and tribunals can be a subsidiary means for the identification of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). There, the Tribunal, in the such decisions in elucidating the law, rather than being themselves a source of international law (as are treaties, customary international law and general principles of law). The use of the term ‘subsidiary means’ does not, and is not intended to, suggest that such decisions are not important for the identification of customary international law”).

⁷⁹⁸ Prosecutor v. Furundžija (see footnote 699 above), para. 144.

⁷⁹⁹ Soering v. the United Kingdom, Application no. 14038/88, Judgment of 7 July 1989, European Court of Human Rights; Cruz Varas and Others v. Sweden, Application no. 15576/89, Judgment of 20 March 1991, European Court of Human Rights, Series A: Judgments and Decisions, vol. 201; and Chahal v. the United Kingdom, Application no. 22414/93, Judgment of 15 November 1996, Grand Chamber, European Court of Human Rights.

⁸⁰⁰ See, for example, Al-Adsani v. the United Kingdom (footnote 706 above), at para. 30; and García Lucero, et al. v. Chile (footnote 718 above), at paras. 123–124, especially note 139. See also, generally, Regina v. Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate and Others: Ex Parte Pinochet Ugarte (No. 3) (footnote 723 above), where several of the Lords referred to Prosecutor v. Furundžija (footnote 699 above).

⁸⁰¹ Prosecutor v. Ayyash, et al., Case No. STL-11-01/I, Interlocutory Decision of 16 February 2011 on the Applicable Law: Terrorism, Conspiracy, Homicide, Perpetration, Cumulative Charging, Appeals Chamber, Special Tribunal for Lebanon, at para. 76. For this decision the Court relied on, inter alia, the judgment of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia in Prosecutor v. Duško Tadić (Case No. IT-94-I-AR-72, Decision of 2 October 1995 on the Defence Motion for Interlocutory Appeal on Jurisdiction, International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia); Prosecutor v. Delalić, et al. (see footnote 757 above); and Prosecutor v. Akayesu, Case No. ICTR-96-4-T, Judgment of 2 September 1998, Trial Chamber I, International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda.

⁸⁰² El Sayed, Case No. CH/PRES/2010/01, Order of 15 April 2010 assigning Matter to Pre-Trial Judge, President of the Special Tribunal of Lebanon, para. 29, referring in particular to Case of Goiburí, et al. v. Paraguay (see footnote 706 above).

judgment written by its then-President, Antonio Cassese, relied on various forms of evidence, including evidence listed in draft conclusion 8, to come to the conclusion that, taken as a whole, the evidence suggested that there was an acceptance and recognition of the peremptory character of the right of access to courts.⁸⁰³ The decision then refers to the decision in Case of Goiburú, et al. v. Paraguay, in which the Inter-American Court of Human Rights determined that the right of access to the courts is a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), in order to give context to the primary evidence relied upon and to solidify that evidence.⁸⁰⁴

(4) The first paragraph of draft conclusion 9 explicitly mentions the International Court of Justice as a subsidiary means for the determination of the peremptory character of norms. There are several reasons for the express mention of the International Court of Justice. First, it is the principal judicial organ of the United Nations and its members are elected by the main political organs of the United Nations. Second, it remains the only international court with general subject-matter jurisdiction. Moreover, while the Court has been reluctant to pronounce on peremptory norms, its jurisprudence has left a mark on the development both of the general concept of peremptory norms and of particular peremptory norms, even in cases where peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) were not explicitly invoked. In particular, its advisory opinions on Reservations to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Genocide, the Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia and the Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, as well as its decisions in Barcelona Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited, East Timor, and the Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua, have made major contributions to the understanding and evolution of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), notwithstanding the fact that they do not expressly and unambiguously invoke, for their respective conclusions, peremptory norms.⁸⁰⁵ When the International Court of Justice has pronounced itself expressly on peremptory norms, its decisions have been even more influential. The judgment of the Court in the Obligation to Prosecute or Extradite case, for example, has confirmed the peremptory status of the prohibition of torture.⁸⁰⁶

(5) The second paragraph of draft conclusion 9 concerns other subsidiary means for the determination of the peremptory character of norms of general international law. As with decisions of international courts and tribunals, these other means are subsidiary in the sense that they facilitate the determination of whether there is acceptance and recognition by States but they themselves are not evidence of such acceptance and recognition. The paragraph lists, as examples of other subsidiary means, the works of expert bodies and teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations, also referred to as scholarly writings. The use of the phrase “may also” in paragraph 2, in contradistinction to the word “are” which is used to qualify decisions of international courts and tribunals in paragraph 1, indicates that less weight may attach to works of expert bodies and scholarly writings in comparison to judicial decisions. The relevance of these other materials as subsidiary means depends on other factors, including on the reasoning of the works or writings, the extent to which the views expressed are accepted by States and the extent to which such views are corroborated either by other forms of evidence listed in draft conclusion 8 or decisions of international courts and tribunals.

(6) The first category relates to the works of expert bodies. The phrase “established by States or international organizations” indicates that the paragraph refers to organs established by international organizations and subsidiary bodies of such organizations, such ⁸⁰³ See ibid., paras. 21–28.

⁸⁰⁴ Ibid., para. 29.

⁸⁰⁵ See Reservations to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Genocide (footnote 703 above); Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia (footnote 793 above), p. 16; Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2004, p. 136; Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons (footnote 699 above); Barcelona Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1970, p. 3; East Timor (Portugal v. Australia), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1995, p. 90; and Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua (footnote 741 above).

⁸⁰⁶ See Questions relating to the Obligation to Prosecute or Extradite (footnote 754 above), at para. 99.

as the International Law Commission as well as expert treaty bodies. The qualification was necessary to emphasize that the expert body in question had to have an intergovernmental mandate and had to be created by States. The use of the phrase “established by States or by international organizations” means that private organizations which do not have an intergovernmental mandate are not included in the category of expert bodies. This does not mean that the works of expert bodies without an intergovernmental mandate are irrelevant. The works of the Institute of International Law or the International Law Association may, for example, qualify as “teachings of the most highly qualified publicists” under paragraph 2 of draft conclusion 9.⁸⁰⁷ The term “works” covers not only the final outcomes of the expert bodies but also their work leading up to the final outcome.

(7) The reliance on other materials is also supported by courts. In RM v. the Attorney-General, for example, the High Court of Kenya relied on the Human Rights Committee general comment No. 18 on non-discrimination⁸⁰⁸ for its determination that non-discrimination is a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).⁸⁰⁹ Similarly, for its conclusion that the principle of non-refoulement was a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), the International Criminal Court relied on, inter alia, an advisory opinion of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.⁸¹⁰ Similarly, the finding by the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia in Prosecutor v. Furundžija that the prohibition of torture was a norm of jus cogens was based, inter alia, on observations of the Inter-American Commission of Human Rights, the Human Rights Committee, and a report of a Special Rapporteur, Mr. Kooijmans.⁸¹¹

(8) The Commission has also often been referred to in the assessment of whether a particular norm has attained peremptory status or not. In assessing the status of the prohibition of the use of force, the International Court of Justice observed that the “International Law Commission ... expressed the view that ‘the law of the Charter [of the United Nations] concerning the prohibition of the use of force in itself constitutes a conspicuous example of a rule in international law having the character of jus cogens’”.⁸¹² Scholarly writings that provide a list of generally accepted peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) often rely on the list provided by the Commission in the commentary to draft article 26 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.⁸¹³ The Commission’s own work may thus also contribute to the identification of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).

⁸⁰⁷ See paragraph (5) of the commentary to draft conclusion 14 of the draft conclusions on the identification of customary international law.

⁸⁰⁸ Human Rights Committee, general comment No. 18 (1989) on non-discrimination, Official Records of the General Assembly, Forty-fifth Session, Supplement No. 40, vol. I (A/45/40 (Vol. I)), annex VI, sect. A, para. 1.

⁸⁰⁹ RM v. Attorney-General, Civil Case No. 1351 2002 (O.S.), Judgment of 1 December 2006, High Court of Kenya at Nairobi, [2006] eKLR, at p. 18.

⁸¹⁰ See Prosecutor v. Katanga (footnote 781 above), at para. 30, referring to the 2007 Advisory Opinion on the Extraterritorial Application of Non-Refoulement Obligations under the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and its 1967 Protocol of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. The Court also referred to the several Executive Committee Conclusions of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

⁸¹¹ See Prosecutor v. Furundžija (footnote 699 above), at paras. 144 and 153. The Tribunal referred to the Inter-American Convention on Human Rights, General Comment on Article 7 and general comment No. 24 of the Human Rights Committee, and a report by Special Rapporteur Kooijmans.

⁸¹² Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua (see footnote 741 above), at pp. 100–101, para. 190. See also Re Víctor Raúl Pinto, Re, Pinto (Víctor Raúl) v. Relatives of Tomás Rojas, Case No. 3125-94, Decision on Annulment of 13 March 2007, Supreme Court of Chile, ILDC 1093 (CL 2007), at paras. 29 and 31.

⁸¹³ Paragraph (5) of the commentary to article 26 of the articles on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts. See den Heijer and van der Wilt (footnote 714 above), at p. 9, referring to the norms in the list as those “beyond contestation”. See also Christófolo (footnote 743 above), at p. 151; and Weatherall (footnote 701 above), at p. 202. See also de Wet (footnote 788 above), at p. 543. She relies, however, not on a Commission list, but rather on the list from paragraph 374 of the report of the Study Group of the Commission (see footnote 702 above), with a list that is slightly modified from that of the Study Group. For example, in the list de Wet provides, “the right of self-

(9) The second paragraph refers to “teachings of the most highly qualified publicists”, which may also be useful as subsidiary material for the identification of peremptory norms of international law.⁸¹⁴ This refers to scholarly writings and other works that may be used as secondary material in assessing and providing context to the primary forms of acceptance and recognition of peremptory status. It is important to emphasize that the weight to be accorded to such teachings will vary greatly depending on the quality of the reasoning and the extent to which they find support in State practice and in the decisions of international courts and tribunals.⁸¹⁵

(10) It is worth pointing out that the subsidiary means identified in paragraphs 1 and 2 of the draft conclusion 9 are not exhaustive. The means identified in draft conclusion 9 are, however, the most common subsidiary means that have been relied upon in the identification of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).

Part Three

Legal consequences of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)

Conclusion 10

Treaties conflicting with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens)

1. A treaty is void if, at the time of its conclusion, it conflicts with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). The provisions of such a treaty have no legal force.
2. If a new peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) emerges, any existing treaty which is in conflict with that norm becomes void and terminates. The parties to such a treaty are released from any obligation further to perform the treaty.

Commentary

(1) Draft conclusion 10 concerns the invalidity and termination of treaties on account of being in conflict with peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). The invalidity of treaties is the legal effect that is most closely associated with peremptory defence” is included as a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) in its own right, while the list of the Study Group contains the “prohibition of aggression” but not “self-defence” as an independent peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).

⁸¹⁴ See, for example, Nguyen Thang Loi v. Dow Chemical Company (In re Agent Orange Product Liability Litigation), 373 F. Supp. 2d 7 (E.D.N.Y. 2005), at p. 108, relying on M.C. Bassiouni, “Crimes against humanity”, in R. Gutman and D. Rieff (eds.), Crimes of War: What the Public Should Know, Norton, 1999; Prosecutor v. Kallon and Kamara, Case Nos. SCSL-2004-15-AR72(E) and SCSL-2004-16-AR72(E), Decision of 13 March 2004 on Challenge to Jurisdiction: Lomé Accord Amnesty, Appeals Chamber, Special Court for Sierra Leone, at para. 71, relying on L. Moir, The Law of Internal Armed Conflict, Cambridge, 2002; and Bayan Muna v. Alberto Romulo (see footnote 723 above), at p. 55, citing M.C. Bassiouni, “International crimes: jus cogens and obligatio erga omnes”, Law and Contemporary Problems, vol. 59 (1996), p. 63. See also Siderman de Blake v. Republic of Argentina (footnote 708 above), at p. 717, citing several authors, including K. Parker and L.B. Neylon, “Jus cogens: compelling the law of human rights”, Hastings International and Comparative Law Review, vol. 12, No. 2 (Winter 1989), pp. 411–463; and K. C. Randall, “Universal jurisdiction under international law”, Texas Law Review, vol. 66 (1987–1988), pp. 785–841, in support of the proposition that the prohibition of torture is a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).

⁸¹⁵ See also paragraph (3) of the commentary to draft conclusion 14 of the draft conclusions on the identification of customary international law (“There is need for caution when drawing upon writings, since their value for determining the existence of a rule of customary international law varies: this is reflected in the words ‘may serve as’. First, writers sometimes seek not merely to record the state of the law as it is (lex lata) but to advocate its development (lex ferenda). In doing so, they do not always distinguish (or distinguish clearly) between the law as it is and the law as they would like it to be. Second, writings may reflect the national or other individual viewpoints of their authors. Third, they differ greatly in quality. Assessing the authority of a given work is thus essential”).

norms of general international law.⁸¹⁶ Article 53 of the 1969 Vienna Convention has rarely been relied upon to invalidate a treaty, so much so that it has been questioned whether it remains operative.⁸¹⁷ The fact that treaties have rarely been invalidated on account of a conflict with peremptory norms is, however, not because the rule in article 53 is not accepted by States, but simply because States do not generally enter into treaties that conflict with peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). Thus, the rule that a treaty in conflict with peremptory norms is invalid continues to be applicable even though it has rarely been applied.

(2) While instances of invalidity of treaties on account of conflict with peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) have been rare, this does not mean that there has been no practice at all that may be relevant to this question. There have been statements made by individual States assessing whether a particular treaty was consistent or not with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) and, accordingly, whether it could be considered as valid or not.⁸¹⁸ The General Assembly has adopted

⁸¹⁶ Danilenko, Law-Making in the International Community (see footnote 735 above), at p. 212 (“As originally conceived, within the codification process relating to the law of treaties, the concept of jus cogens applies only to treaty relationships ... to invalidate bilateral and multilateral agreements contrary to fundamental community rules recognized as ‘higher law’”). See also Kleinlein (footnote 764 above), at p. 181; K. Kawasaki, “A brief note on the legal effects of jus cogens in international law”, Hitotsubashi Journal of Law and Politics, vol. 34 (2006), p. 27; and den Heijer and van der Wilt (footnote 714 above), at p. 7.

⁸¹⁷ Costelloe (see footnote 694 above), at p. 55 (“the relevant [provisions of the 1969 Vienna Convention] are very narrow, and the question whether they still have much relevance ... and are now virtually a dead letter, is justified”). See Charlesworth and Chinkin (footnote 701 above), pp. 65–66 (“Despite fears that the inclusion of [article 53 of the Vienna Convention] would subvert the principle of pacta sunt servanda and act to destabilize the certainty provided by treaty commitments, jus cogens doctrine has been only rarely invoked in this context. It thus has had little practical impact upon the operation of treaties”); and Kadelbach (footnote 700 above), p. 161 (“direct conflict in the sense that a treaty has an illicit subject-matter is a theoretical case”). See also Cassese (footnote 701 above), pp. 159–160 (“Should we conclude that consequently what is normally asserted to be a major advance accomplished by the 1969 Vienna Convention ... has in fact proved over the years to be an outright flop?”). See, for examples, Shelton, “Sherlock Holmes and the mystery of jus cogens” (footnote 714 above), at p. 36; and Kadelbach (footnote 700 above), p. 152. See, for discussion, Knuchel (ibid.), at p. 141.

⁸¹⁸ For general statements to this effect, see the statement by the Netherlands during the eighteenth session of the Sixth Committee, Agenda Item 69, Report of the International Law Commission, para. 2 (on the question of jus cogens, the “Agreement concerning the Sudeten German Territory, signed at Munich on 29 September 1938, was one of the few examples of treaties which had come to be regarded as contrary to international public order”). Cyprus, at the same meeting and in order to show the practice in support of nullity as a consequence of conflict with peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), listed a number of treaties as providing for nullity on account of conflict with peremptory norm, namely the prohibition on the use of force (“The Covenant of the League of Nations, the General Treaty for the Renunciation of War as an Instrument of National Policy (known as the Briand Kellogg Pact); the Charter of the Nürnberg Tribunal; the Charter of the International Military Tribunal for the trial of the major war criminals in the Far East and, most recently, Article 2, paragraph 4, of the Charter of the United Nations made it lex lata in modern international law that a treaty procured by the illegal threat or use of force was void ab initio”). See also Israel during the eighteenth session of the Sixth Committee, Agenda Item 69, Report of the International Law Commission, para. 8. For more specific statements see East Timor (Portugal v. Australia), Counter-Memorial of the Government of Australia of 1 June 1992, para. 223, declaring that the “Timor Gap Treaty” (the Treaty on the zone of cooperation in an area between the Indonesian province of East Timor and Northern Australia, signed over the zone of cooperation on 11 December 1989, United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 1654, No. 28462, p. 105), if in conflict with the right of self-determination, would be invalid on account of being in breach of a norm of jus cogens; the memorandum of the Legal Adviser of the State Department, Roberts B. Owen, to the Acting Secretary of State, 29 December 1979, in U.S. Digest, chapter 2, section 1, para. 4, reproduced in M.L. Nash, “Contemporary practice of the United States relating to international law”, American Journal of International Law, vol. 74, No. 2 (April 1980), p. 418, at p. 419 (“Nor is it clear that the treaty between the USSR and Afghanistan ... is valid. If it actually does lend itself to support of Soviet intervention of the type in question in Afghanistan, it would be void under contemporary principles of international law, since it would conflict with what the Vienna Convention on the Law resolutions⁸¹⁹ which some have interpreted as recognizing that the validity of certain agreements is to be determined by reference to their consistency with certain fundamental principles. There have also been judicial decisions that have considered the invalidity of treaties on account of possible inconsistency with peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). In Prosecutor v. Taylor, the Special Court for Sierra Leone had to determine whether the provision in its own Statute which removed immunities of officials was invalid.⁸²⁰ The Court held that since the provision was “not in conflict with any peremptory norm of general international law, [it] must be given effect” to by the Court.⁸²¹ It seems to follow that had the provision been in conflict it would not have been given effect to by the Court. Similarly, in the Aloeboetoe, et al. v. Suriname case before the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, reliance had been placed on an agreement concluded between the Netherlands and the Saramaka community for the purposes of reparation.⁸²² The Court noted that, under some provisions of the treaty, the Saramaka undertook to capture any escaped slaves and return them to slavery.⁸²³ On that account, the Court held that if the agreement in question were a treaty, it would be “null and void because it contradicts the norms of jus cogens superveniens”.⁸²⁴

(3) Draft conclusion 10 follows the approach of the 1969 Vienna Convention by distinguishing between, on the one hand, treaties that, at the time of their conclusion, are in conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) (paragraph 1) and, on the other hand, treaties that conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law that emerges subsequent to the conclusion of the treaty (paragraph 2).⁸²⁵ The first alternative is addressed in the first sentence of article 53 of the 1969 Vienna Convention while the second alternative is addressed in article 64 of that Convention. Both paragraphs follow closely the text of the 1969 Vienna Convention.

(4) The first sentence of the first paragraph of draft conclusion 10 states simply that treaty is void if, at the time of its conclusion, it conflicts with a peremptory norm of general international law. The sentence follows closely the first sentence of article 53. The import of this sentence is that such a treaty is void ab initio. The second sentence of the first paragraph of draft conclusion 10 is taken from the first paragraph of article 69 of the 1969 Vienna Convention and provides that the provisions of a treaty that is invalid on account of being in conflict with a peremptory norm at the time of its conclusion have no legal force.

of Treaties describes as a ‘peremptory norm of general international law’ ... , namely that contained in Article 2, paragraph 4 of the Charter” of the United Nations).

⁸¹⁹ General Assembly resolution 33/28A of 7 December 1978; General Assembly resolution 34/65 B of 29 November 1979; General Assembly resolutions 36/51 of 24 November 1981; and General Assembly resolution 39/42 of 5 December 1984.

⁸²⁰ Prosecutor v. Taylor, Case No. SCSL-2003-01-I, Decision of 31 May 2004 on Immunity from Jurisdiction, Appeals Chamber, Special Court for Sierra Leone, para. 53. See also Prosecutor v. Kallon, Case No. SCSL-2004-15-AR72(E), Decision of 13 March 2004 on Constitutionality and Lack of Jurisdiction, Appeals Chamber, Special Court for Sierra Leone.

⁸²¹ Prosecutor v. Taylor (see footnote above), para. 53.

⁸²² Aloeboetoe and Others v. Suriname, Judgment of 10 September 1993 on Reparation and Costs, Inter-American Court of Human Rights, Series C, No. 15.

⁸²³ Ibid., at para. 57.

⁸²⁴ Ibid.

⁸²⁵ See paragraph (6) of the commentary to article 50 of the draft articles on the law of treaties, Yearbook ... 1966, vol. II, p. 248 (draft article 50 “has to be read in conjunction with article 61 (Emergence of a new rule of jus cogens), and in the view of the Commission, there is no question of the present article having retroactive effects. It concerns cases where a treaty is void at the time of its conclusion by reason of the fact that its provisions are in conflict with an already existing rule of jus cogens. The treaty is wholly void because its actual conclusion conflicts with a peremptory norm of general international law ... Article 61, on the other hand, concerns cases where a treaty, valid when concluded, becomes void and terminates by reason of the subsequent development establishment of a new rule of jus cogens with which its provisions are in conflict. The words ‘becomes void and terminates’ make it quite clear, the Commission considered that the emergence of a new rule of jus cogens is not to have retroactive effects on the validity of a treaty. The invalidity is to attach only from the time of the establishment of the new rule of jus cogens”) (emphasis in original).

(5) The second paragraph of draft conclusion 10 concerns the consequences of a newly emerged peremptory norm of general international law on an existing treaty. It states that such a treaty becomes void and terminates. The phrase “becomes void and terminates” indicates that the treaty is not void ab initio but only becomes void at the emergence of the peremptory norm. The treaty becomes void from the moment the norm in question is recognized and accepted as one from which no derogation is permitted. The consequence of the treaty becoming void is that it is only the continuing legal or subsequent legal effects of the provisions of the treaty that terminate. It is for this reason that the second sentence of the second paragraph provides that the parties to such a treaty are released from any obligation further to perform the treaty. This formulation is drawn from article 71, paragraph 2 (a), of the 1969 Vienna Convention. The effect of the text is to recognize that the treaty provisions were valid and could produce legal consequences prior to the emergence of the peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). Subject to draft conclusion 12, it is only the obligation to “further” perform that is affected by any termination. Prior to the acceptance and recognition, the rights and obligations under the impugned treaty are fully valid and applicable.

(6) Draft conclusion 10 on the invalidity of treaties on account of conflict with peremptory norms should be read together with draft conclusion 21 on procedural requirements for invoking invalidity. In accordance with draft conclusion 21, a party to a treaty cannot unilaterally declare that a treaty is, in its view, contrary to a peremptory norm and excuse itself from the duty to perform under the treaty. The procedure set out in draft conclusion 21 is to be followed to confirm, objectively, the invalidity of the treaty before any consequences of invalidity can be relied upon.

Conclusion 11

Separability of treaty provisions conflicting with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens)

1. A treaty which, at the time of its conclusion, conflicts with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) is void in whole, and no separation of the provisions of the treaty is permitted.

2. A treaty which becomes void because of the emergence of a new peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) terminates in whole, unless:

(a) the provisions that are in conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) are separable from the remainder of the treaty with regard to their application;

(b) it appears from the treaty or is otherwise established that acceptance of the said provisions was not an essential basis of the consent of any party to be bound by the treaty as a whole; and

(c) continued performance of the remainder of the treaty would not be unjust.

Commentary

(1) Draft conclusion 11 addresses circumstances where only some provisions of a treaty are in conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) while other provisions are not in conflict with such a norm. As with draft conclusion 10 concerning invalidity of treaties, the draft conclusion follows the general approach in the 1969 Vienna Convention, namely to distinguish between, on the one hand, treaties which, at the time of their conclusion conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) and, on the other hand, treaties which conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) that emerges subsequent to the conclusion of the treaty. The draft conclusion also follows closely the text contained in the relevant provisions of the 1969 Vienna Convention.

(2) The first paragraph of draft conclusion 11 concerns those cases where the treaty, at the time of its conclusion, is in conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). Under the 1969 Vienna Convention, in such cases, the treaty becomes void in whole. Article 53 of the Convention provides that the “treaty is void” and not that the relevant provision of the treaty concerned is void. Moreover, article 44, paragraph 5, of the 1969 Vienna Convention makes it express that, in such cases, severance of the impugned provisions from the treaty is not permitted. The whole treaty is void ab initio. Draft conclusion 11 thus makes it clear that the whole treaty is void and that there is no possibility of separating those provisions that are in conflict with peremptory norms from other provisions of the treaty. First, the phrase “void in whole” in the draft conclusion is meant to clarify that the whole treaty and not only the offending provision is void. Second, to emphasize this basic point, the second part of the sentence explicitly states that “no separation of the provisions of the treaty is permitted”. The first part of the sentence follows the text of article 53 of the 1969 Vienna Convention, while the second part of the sentence is based on paragraph 5 of article 44 of the Convention, which excludes cases of invalidity under article 53 from the rules on separability in article 44. The view was expressed that there may be cases in which it would nevertheless be justified to separate different provisions of a treaty.

(3) The second paragraph addresses circumstances where a treaty (or particular provisions of a treaty) conflict with a peremptory norm which emerges subsequent to the conclusion of the treaty. The formulation of the second paragraph follows closely that in paragraph 3 of article 44 of the 1969 Vienna Convention. It recognizes the possibility of separation in cases where a treaty becomes invalid due to the emergence of a peremptory norm of general international law subsequent to the conclusion of the treaty.

(4) The chapeau of the second paragraph makes plain that, as a general rule, a treaty becomes void as a whole if it conflicts with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), even in cases where the peremptory norm emerges subsequent to the conclusion of the treaty. For that reason, the first part of the chapeau of the second paragraph of draft conclusion 11 provides that a treaty which becomes void because of the emergence of a new peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) terminates in whole. The word “unless”, at the end of the chapeau, signifies that it is only in those limited instances which are covered by subparagraphs (a) to (c) where separation may take place. The elements listed in subparagraphs (a) to (c) are cumulative in nature. In other words, all three elements must be present in order for provisions that conflict with a peremptory norm to be separated from the rest of the treaty.

(5) The elements listed in the second paragraph of draft conclusion 11 are taken from article 44, paragraph 3, of the 1969 Vienna Convention. The first element, as stipulated in subparagraph (a), is that the provisions which are in conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) must be separable from the remainder of the treaty with regard to their application. This means that it must be possible to apply the rest of the treaty without the provisions which are in conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). Where the other provisions serve the function of facilitating the implementation of the impugned provision, such a provision can obviously not be separated from the rest of the treaty with regard to its application.

(6) It is not enough that it is possible to apply the treaty without the impugned provision. Subparagraph (b) of the second paragraph of draft conclusion 11 states that it must appear from the treaty or be otherwise established that the acceptance of the said provisions was not an essential basis of the consent of any party to be bound by the treaty as a whole. Even if a treaty could be applied without the impugned provision, it would be contrary to the consensual nature of treaties for a treaty to be applied without a provision that was “an essential basis” for its conclusion, since without that provision there would have been no consent to the treaty.

(7) Pursuant to subparagraph (c), the last condition that has to be met for severance of a provision that conflicts with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) that emerges subsequent to the conclusion of a treaty is that the continued performance under the treaty would not be unjust. The word “unjust”, in this context, is meant to refer to the essential balance of rights and obligations created by the treaty which could be disturbed only if some provisions were separated while others were retained. Furthermore, to decide whether continued performance of the treaty would be “unjust”, consideration needs to be given not only to the impact on the parties of the treaty, but also impacts beyond parties, if relevant and necessary. Whether the conditions set out in the second paragraph are present is to be established by a consideration of all the relevant circumstances, including the subject of the provision, its relation to other clauses of the treaty and the travaux préparatoires amongst other factors.⁸²⁶

Conclusion 12

Consequences of the invalidity and termination of treaties conflicting with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens)

1. Parties to a treaty which is void as a result of being in conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) at the time of the treaty's conclusion have a legal obligation to:

(a) eliminate as far as possible the consequences of any act performed in reliance on any provision of the treaty which conflicts with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens); and

(b) bring their mutual relations into conformity with the peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).

2. The termination of a treaty on account of the emergence of a new peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) does not affect any right, obligation or legal situation created through the execution of the treaty prior to the termination of the treaty, provided that those rights, obligations or situations may thereafter be maintained only to the extent that their maintenance is not in itself in conflict with the new peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).

Commentary

(1) One of the consequences of a conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) is that the treaty is void or, in the case of the emergence of the peremptory norm subsequent to the adoption of the treaty, the treaty becomes void. Yet a treaty, even a void one, may lead to consequences through, for example, parties acting pursuant to the treaty. Those consequences may manifest themselves through the creation of rights and obligations or by the establishment of factual situations. Draft conclusion 12 addresses the consequences of the invalidation of treaties as a result of a conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). There is therefore a close relationship between draft conclusion 10 and draft conclusion 12. Draft conclusion 12 addresses the consequences of a treaty that has been rendered void.

(2) As is the case for draft conclusions 10 and 11, draft conclusion 12 is structured on the basis of the distinction between articles 53 and 64 of the 1969 Vienna Convention: those cases of invalidity as a result of a conflict with an existing peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) and those cases of invalidity on account of conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law that emerges subsequent to the adoption of the treaty. Furthermore, as with draft conclusions 10 and 11, draft conclusion 12 follows closely the text of the 1969 Vienna Convention. Finally, as is the case with draft conclusion 10, the consequences for the invalidity of a treaty are subject to the procedural requirements set out in draft conclusion 21.

(3) The first paragraph of draft conclusion 12 addresses cases where a treaty is void as a result of a conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) at the time of the treaty's conclusion. The formulation of the paragraph follows closely the formulation of article 71, paragraph 1, of the 1969 Vienna Convention concerning "a treaty which is void under article 53". Since in that case no treaty comes into being – which is the essence of void ab initio – no reliance can be placed on the provisions of the treaty. However, acts may have been performed in good faith in reliance on the void treaty producing particular consequences. To address these consequences, the first paragraph of draft conclusion 12 refers to two obligations.

⁸²⁶ See paragraph (5) of the commentary to article 41 of the draft articles on the law of treaties, Yearbook ... 1966, vol. (II), p. 238.

(4) The first obligation of the parties to the void treaty is to eliminate as far as possible the consequences of any act performed in reliance on any provision of the treaty in conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). First, it will be noted that the obligation is to eliminate “as far as possible”. The obligation is thus not one of result but one of conduct. It recognizes that it may not be possible to eliminate the relevant consequences but requires States to make best efforts to eliminate any such consequences. Second, the duty is not to eliminate the consequences of any acts performed in reliance of any part of the treaty, but only the consequences of those acts which have been performed in reliance on the impugned provisions of the treaty. Thus, while the whole treaty is void, there is no obligation to eliminate consequences of acts performed in reliance of provisions of the treaty that are not in conflict with peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). The second obligation, which flows from the first, is that the parties are to bring their mutual relations into conformity with the peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). This means that, moving forward, the parties to the treaty should ensure that their relations are consistent with the peremptory norm in question. Thus, while the first obligation is concerned with past conduct, the second is concerned with future conduct.

(5) The second paragraph concerns the situation addressed by article 64 of the 1969 Vienna Convention, namely those cases in which a treaty becomes void as a result of a peremptory norm that emerges subsequent to the adoption of the treaty. The formulation in the second paragraph of draft conclusion 12 follows closely the text of article 71, paragraph 2, of the 1969 Vienna Convention. It must be reiterated that, in such cases, the treaty only becomes invalid after the emergence of the peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). In other words, during the period between the adoption of the treaty and the emergence of the peremptory norm, the treaty remains valid and consequently acts performed and rights and obligations created pursuant to it, remain valid. There can therefore be no obligation to eliminate consequences of acts validly performed. The draft conclusion states that the termination of a treaty due to conflict with a peremptory norm that emerges subsequent to the adoption of the treaty does not affect any right, obligation or legal situation created through the execution of the treaty prior to the termination of the treaty. Thus, while the treaty becomes void, rights, obligations or legal situations created through the lawful performance under the treaty will not be affected. However, those rights, obligations or legal situations may be maintained or relied upon only to the extent that their continued existence is not itself a violation of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).

Conclusion 13

Absence of effect of reservations to treaties on peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)

1. A reservation to a treaty provision that reflects a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) does not affect the binding nature of that norm, which shall continue to apply as such.
2. A reservation cannot exclude or modify the legal effect of a treaty in a manner contrary to a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).

Commentary

(1) Draft conclusion 13 concerns the effects of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) on the rules of international law relating to reservations to treaties. The purpose of the draft conclusion is not to regulate reservations, which are dealt with in articles 19 to 23 of the 1969 Vienna Convention. The draft conclusion proceeds from the effects of reservations as provided for in the Convention.

(2) The first paragraph addresses the case where a reservation is entered to a treaty provision that reflects a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). The formulation of the first paragraph of draft conclusion 13 is based on the Commission’s Guide to Practice on Reservations to Treaties.⁸²⁷ It states that a reservation to a provision in a treaty that reflects a peremptory norm does not affect the binding nature of that norm which shall continue to apply as such. The phrase “as such” is intended to indicate that even when reflected in a treaty provision, a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) retains its validity independent of the treaty provision. This means that while the reservation may well affect the treaty rule and the application of the treaty rule, the norm, as a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), will not be affected and will continue to apply. The rule reflected in this paragraph of draft conclusion 13 flows from the normal operation of international law. It derives, in particular, from the fact that the treaty provision over which a reservation has been formulated, and the peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) in question, have a separate existence.⁸²⁸

⁸²⁷ Guide to Practice on Reservations to Treaties, Official Records of the General Assembly, Sixty-sixth Session, Supplement No. 10 (A/66/10/Add.1), guideline 4.4.3.

(3) The rule in the first paragraph of draft conclusion 13 does not relate to the validity of the reservation. Whether the reservation is valid or not, and the consequences of any invalidity, are matters that are governed by the rules contained in the 1969 Vienna Convention. It would be going too far to prohibit a reservation to a provision in a treaty which reflects a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) outright since such a determination should always be dependent upon ascertaining the object and purpose of the treaty in question – an exercise that can only be done through the interpretation of each particular treaty. It is nonetheless important to emphasize that, whatever the validity of the reservation in question, a State cannot escape the binding nature of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) by formulating a reservation to a treaty provision reflecting that norm.

(4) The second paragraph of draft conclusion 13 concerns reservations which, on their face, are neutral and do not relate to peremptory norms, but whose application would be contrary to a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). Such reservations are invalid. Drawing on paragraph 2 of guideline 4.4.3 of the Guide to Practice on Reservations to Treaties, draft conclusion 13 states that a reservation cannot exclude or modify the legal effect of a treaty in a manner contrary to a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). The typical example identified in the commentary to guideline 4.4.3 is a reservation “intended to exclude a category of persons from benefitting from certain rights granted under a treaty”.⁸²⁹ The right to education, though very important, is not, at this time, a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). Thus, the formulation of a reservation to a treaty provision proclaiming a right to education would not, as such, be contrary to a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) nor would it constitute a reservation to a treaty provision reflecting a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). However, a reservation that limits the implementation of such right to a particular racial group or excludes a particular racial group from the enjoyment of the treaty right, may well be found to violate the generally recognized peremptory norm of general international law prohibiting racial discrimination.⁸³⁰

Conclusion 14

Rules of customary international law conflicting with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens)

1. A rule of customary international law does not come into existence if it conflicts with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). This is without prejudice to the possible modification of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) by a subsequent norm of general international law having the same character.

⁸²⁸ Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua (see footnote 741 above), at pp. 93–94, para. 175 (addressing this issue in the context of a reservation to a declaration recognizing as compulsory the jurisdiction of the Court under Article 36, paragraph 2, of its Statute).

⁸²⁹ Guide to Practice on Reservations to Treaties (see footnote 827 above), para. (5) of the commentary to guideline 4.4.3.

⁸³⁰ See, for example, paragraph (5) of the commentary to article 26 of the articles on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, Yearbook ... 2001, vol. II (Part Two) and corrigendum, p. 85.

2. A rule of customary international law not of a peremptory character ceases to exist if and to the extent that it conflicts with a new peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).
3. The persistent objector rule does not apply to peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).

Commentary

(1) Draft conclusion 14 addresses the consequences of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) for customary international law. Draft conclusion 14 is divided into three paragraphs. The first paragraph concerns the consequences that an existing peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) has on the formation of a new rule of customary international law. The second paragraph concerns the consequences that a new peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) has on existing rules of customary international law. The third paragraph addresses the non-applicability of the persistent objector rule. The first two paragraphs mirror draft conclusion 10, which distinguishes between the situation of a treaty at the time of its conclusion conflicting with an existing peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), on the one hand, and that of a treaty conflicting with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) that emerges subsequent to the conclusion of a treaty.

(2) The first sentence of the first paragraph of draft conclusion 14 provides that a rule of customary international law does not come into existence if it conflicts with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). The words “does not come into existence” are meant to indicate that, even if constituent elements of customary international law are present, a rule of customary international law does not come into existence if the putative rule conflicts with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). Unlike in the case of treaties, the terms “invalid” or “void” are not appropriate since the putative rule of customary international law does not come into existence in the first place.

(3) Peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) are hierarchically superior to other norms of international law and therefore override such norms in the case of conflict. Decisions of national courts have recognized that peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) prevail over conflicting rules of customary international law. In Siderman de Blake v. Republic of Argentina, the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit considered that “[i]ndeed ... the supremacy of jus cogens extends over all rules of international law” and noted that “norms that have attained the status of jus cogens ‘prevail over and invalidate international agreements and other rules of international law in conflict with them’”.⁸³¹ The Supreme Court of Argentina has similarly stated that crimes against humanity had the “character of jus cogens, meaning that [the prohibition is] above both treaty law, and all other sources of international law”.⁸³²

(4) The position that peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) prevail over conflicting rules of customary international law has also been recognized in decisions of international courts and tribunals. In the Jurisdictional Immunities of the State case, the International Court of Justice noted the proposition of Italy that “jus cogens rules always prevail over any inconsistent rule of international law, whether contained in a treaty or in customary international law”.⁸³³ The Court did not reject that proposition, but declined to find that there was a conflict between the rule on State immunities in civil proceedings and peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).⁸³⁴ The hierarchical superiority

⁸³¹ Siderman de Blake v. Republic of Argentina (see footnote 708 above), p. 715 (citing to the Restatement (Third) of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States (1987), § 102 comment k).

⁸³² Julio Héctor Simón y otros s/ privación ilegítima de la libertad (see footnote 724 above), para. 48 (original: “el carácter de jus cogens de modo que se encuentra no sólo por encima de los tratados sino incluso por sobre todas las fuentes del derecho”).

⁸³³ Jurisdictional Immunities of the State (Germany v. Italy: Greece intervening), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 2012, p. 99, at p. 140, para. 92.

⁸³⁴ Ibid., paras. 92–93. See in this respect, Ulf Linderfalk, Understanding Jus Cogens in International Law and International Legal Discourse (forthcoming, 2019), at section 1.3.1 (examples include the priority-rule implicitly confirmed by the International Court of Justice in the Jurisdictional of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) over customary international law was also recognized in Al-Adsani v. the United Kingdom, in which the European Court of Human Rights determined, having considered Prosecutor v. Furundžija, that peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) are those norms that enjoy “a higher rank in the international hierarchy than treaty law and even ‘ordinary’ customary rules”.⁸³⁵ The consequences of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) on the existence of a conflicting rule of customary international law is aptly captured in the joint dissenting opinion of Judges Rozakis and Caflisch in the Al-Adsani v. the United Kingdom case:

By accepting that the rule on prohibition of torture is a rule of jus cogens, the majority recognise that it is hierarchically higher than any other rule of international law For the basic characteristic of a jus cogens rule is that ... it overrides any other rule which does not have the same status. In the event of a conflict between a jus cogens rule and any other rule of international law, the former prevails.⁸³⁶

(5) The rule in the first sentence of the first paragraph of draft conclusion 14, which states that a rule of customary international law does not come into existence if it conflicts with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), follows from the fact that peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) prevail over conflicting rules of customary international law. Thus, the High Court of Kenya, in The Kenya Section of the International Commission of Jurists v. the Attorney-General and Others, stated that peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) “rendered void any other pre-emptory rules which come into conflict with them”.⁸³⁷

(6) The second sentence of the first paragraph of draft conclusion 14 provides that the general principle captured in the first sentence is without prejudice to the possible modification of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) by a subsequent norm of general international law having the same character. This is based on the recognition that, as provided for in draft conclusion 5, customary international law is the most common basis for peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) and that, therefore, modification of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) is likely to occur through the subsequent acceptance and recognition of a rule of customary international law as a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) or the emergence of a new rule of customary international law so accepted and recognized. However, to be able to modify a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), the rule of customary international law in question must have the same character as the peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) being modified. The phrase “having the same character”, which is taken from article 53 of the 1969 Vienna Convention indicates that such a rule of customary international law must itself be recognized and accepted as one from which no derogation is permitted and which can only be modified by a subsequent peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). That a rule of customary international law could only derogate from, and thus modify, a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) if such a rule of customary international law also had a peremptory character is supported by a judgment of the Queen’s Bench Division of the England and Wales High Court of Justice in R (Mohamed) v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, which, having referred to the hierarchical superiority of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), stated that their “derogation

Immunities of the State case: in the event of a conflict between a jus cogens norm and a rule of customary international law, States must act upon the former).

⁸³⁵ Al-Adsani v. the United Kingdom (see footnote 706 above), para. 60. See also Prosecutor v. Furundžija (footnote 699 above), para. 153.

⁸³⁶ Joint dissenting opinion of Judges Rozakis and Caflisch (joined by Judges Wildhaber, Costa, Cabral Barreto and Vajić) in Al-Adsani v. the United Kingdom (see footnote 706 above), para. 1. See also T. Kleinlein (footnote 764 above), p. 187 (“it is a relatively straightforward case to perceive a structural hierarchy between jus cogens and regional or local customary rules”).

⁸³⁷ The Kenya Section of the International Commission of Jurists v. the Attorney-General and Others (see footnote 748 above). See also C v. Director of Immigration, HCAL 132/2006, [2008] 2 HKC 165, [2008] HKCFI 109, ILDC 1119 (HK 2008), 18 February 2008, para. 75.

by States through treaties or rules of customary law not possessing the same status [was] not permitted”.⁸³⁸

(7) The second paragraph of draft conclusion 14 concerns cases in which a rule of customary international law, which at the time of its formation did not conflict with existing peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), conflicts with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) that emerges subsequent to the formation of the rule of customary international law. It provides that such a rule of customary international law “ceases to exist if and to the extent that it conflicts with a new peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens)”. The phrase “ceases to exist” indicates that prior to the emergence of the new peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), the rule of customary international law was in force but that it ceases to exist upon the emergence of the peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). The phrase “if and to the extent” is meant to indicate that only those parts of the rule of customary international law in question that conflict with the peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) will cease to exist. This phrase operates like a separability provision, in order to maintain those parts of the rule of customary international law that are consistent with the peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). The qualifier “if and to the extent” does not apply to the first paragraph of draft conclusion 14 since, in the case of a pre-existing peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), the rule of customary international law in question does not come into existence at all.

(8) The third paragraph of draft conclusion 14 deals with the persistent objector rule. It provides that the persistent objector rule does not apply to peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). Draft conclusion 15 of the Commission’s draft conclusions on identification of customary international law states that a rule of customary international law is not opposable to a State that has persistently objected to that rule of customary international law while it was in the process of formation for as long as that State maintains its objection. Draft conclusion 15 of the draft conclusions on identification of customary international law also stated, however, that this rule was without prejudice to any question concerning peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).⁸³⁹

(9) The rule that persistent objection does not apply to peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) flows from both the universal application and hierarchical superiority of peremptory norms of general international law as reflected in draft conclusion 3.⁸⁴⁰ This means that peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) apply to all States. In this respect, the Federal Supreme Court of Switzerland, in Youssef Nada v. State Secretariat for Economic Affairs and Federal Department of Economic Affairs, stated that jus cogens norms “were binding on all subjects of international law”.⁸⁴¹ The Inter-American Court of Human Rights has concluded that peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) “bind all States”.⁸⁴² The rule that, by virtue of their universal application and hierarchical superiority, peremptory norms of general

⁸³⁸ R (Mohamed) v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, [2008] EWHC 2048 (Admin), [2009] 1 WLR 2579, para. 142 (ii). See also A. Caro de Beer and D. Tladi, “The use of force against Syria in response to alleged use of chemical weapons by Syria: a return to humanitarian intervention?”, Heidelberg Journal of International Law, vol. 79, No. 2 (2019), p. 217, in which the authors noted that if the prohibition on the use of force were regarded as a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), a subsequent rule of customary international law could only emerge if it were “‘accepted and recognized’ as having a peremptory character, in a way that would modify the” pre-existing peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).

⁸³⁹ Draft conclusion 15 of the draft conclusions on identification of customary international law, report of the International Law Commission on the work of its seventieth session, Official Records of the General Assembly, Seventy-third Session, Supplement No. 10 (A/73/10), p. 121.

⁸⁴⁰ On the universal application of these norms, see, for example, the written statement of 19 June 1995 by the Government of Mexico on the request for an advisory opinion submitted to the International Court of Justice by the General Assembly at its forty-ninth session (resolution 49/75K), para. 7 (“The norms ... are of a legally binding nature for all the States (jus cogens)”).

⁸⁴¹ Youssef Nada v. State Secretariat for Economic Affairs and Federal Department of Economic Affairs (see footnote 698 above), para. 7 (emphasis added).

⁸⁴² Juridical Condition and Rights of Undocumented Migrants (see footnote 731 above), p. 113, paras. 4–5.

international law (jus cogens) cannot be subject to the persistent objector rule has been reflected in statements by States.⁸⁴³ Specifically in response to an argument about the persistent objector rule, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, in Michael Domingues v. United States, determined that peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) “bind the international community as a whole, irrespective of protest, recognition or acquiescence”.⁸⁴⁴

(10) A question that arises in scholarly writings is whether a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) can ever emerge in the face of persistent objection of one or a few States.⁸⁴⁵ It can because persistent objection to a rule of customary international law by a few States does not prevent the rule’s emergence; rather, such objection merely renders that rule not opposable to the State or States concerned for so long as the objection is maintained. For that reason, the persistent objector rule does not prevent the emergence of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) based on a rule of customary international law to which one or more States have persistently objected. At the same time, if a rule of customary international law, to which a State has persistently objected, becomes accepted and recognized by the international community of States as a whole as one from which no derogation is permitted and which can only be modified by a subsequent norm of general international law having the same character, the effect of the persistent objection falls away.

(11) Whether there is such acceptance and recognition of a rule of general international law (jus cogens) may be affected by the objections. According to the second paragraph of draft conclusion 7, the phrase “international community of States as a whole” does not require the acceptance and recognition of all States but does require the acceptance and recognition of a very large majority. Thus, if a rule of customary international law was the object of persistent objections from several States, such objections might not be sufficient ⁸⁴³ See also the Islamic Republic of Iran, “the ‘persistent objector’ ... had no place in the formation of jus cogens” (A/C.6/68/SR.26, para. 4). See also statements by States in the 2016 and 2018 meetings of the Sixth Committee (agenda item 78: report of the International Law Commission), particularly the following: Brazil “welcomed the clarification in draft conclusion 15 [of the draft conclusions on identification of customary international law] that the inclusion of the persistent objector rule was without prejudice to any issues of jus cogens” (A/C.6/71/SR.22, para. 18); Chile stated that “[w]here the rules of jus cogens were concerned, the persistent objector institution did not apply” (A/C.6/71/SR.21, para. 102); Cyprus “welcomed paragraph 3 [of draft conclusion 15 of the draft conclusions on identification of customary international law] ... [as] without prejudice to any question concerning peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)” (A/C.6/73/SR.23, para. 43); El Salvador “agreed with the Special Rapporteur that the doctrine of the persistent objector was not applicable to jus cogens norms” (A/C.6/71/SR.25, para. 63); Finland, on behalf of the Nordic countries (Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden), “welcomed the inclusion in the draft conclusions [on identification of customary international law] of the persistent objector rule Nonetheless, the category of rule to which the State objected should be taken into account and particular consideration must be given to universal respect for fundamental rules, especially those relating to the protection of individuals” (A/C.6/71/SR.20, para. 52); Greece “reiterated [the] delegation’s doubts about the applicability of the persistent objector rule in relation not only to the rules of jus cogens but also to the broader category of the general principles of international law” (A/C.6/71/SR.22, para. 10); Iceland, speaking on behalf of the Nordic countries (Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden), stated that “the notion of persistent objector was not compatible with the concept of jus cogens” (A/C.6/71/SR.24, para. 63); Mexico stated that “there could be no persistent objection to jus cogens rules” (A/C.6/71/SR.22, para. 25); Slovenia “agreed with the enunciation of jus cogens norms as being of a special and exceptional nature, reflecting the common and overarching values adhered to by the international community. For that reason, [the] delegation reaffirmed its view that the persistent objector was incompatible with the nature of jus cogens” (A/C.6/71/SR.26, para. 114); South Africa “agreed with [the Special Rapporteur’s] preliminary observation that there could be no objection to jus cogens norms” (A/C.6/71/SR.26, para. 86); and Spain stated that “it was regrettable that it had not been specifically stated in draft conclusion 15 [of the draft conclusions on identification of customary international law] that there could be no persistent objection to peremptory norms of general international law” (A/C.6/73/SR.21, para. 91).

⁸⁴⁴ Michael Domingues v. United States (see footnote 706 above), para. 49.

⁸⁴⁵ C. Mik, “Jus cogens in contemporary international law”, Polish Yearbook of International Law, vol. 33, No. 27 (2013), p. 50. See also D. Costelloe (footnote 694 above), pp. 21–23.

to preclude the emergence of a rule of customary international law but might be sufficient to preclude the norm from being recognized as a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). In other words, to the extent that such persistent objection implies that the norm in question is not accepted and recognized by the international community of States as a whole as one from which no derogation is permitted, then a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) might not arise.

(12) A view was expressed that “persistent objection” to a rule of customary international law should not be characterized as a “rule” but rather as a “doctrine”. The Commission, however, decided to use the phrase “persistent objector rule” since this concept is often referred to as a “rule” and since the Commission has already referred to it as either a “rule” or a “doctrine” in its prior work.⁸⁴⁶

(13) The application of draft conclusion 14 is to be read together with the interpretative rule set out in draft conclusion 20 and the procedural requirements set forth in draft conclusion 21.

Conclusion 15

Obligations created by unilateral acts of States conflicting with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens)

1. A unilateral act of a State manifesting the intention to be bound by an obligation under international law that would be in conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) does not create such an obligation.

2. An obligation under international law created by a unilateral act of a State ceases to exist if and to the extent that it conflicts with a new peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).

Commentary

(1) Draft conclusion 15 addresses the legal consequences of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) for unilateral acts of States manifesting the intention to be bound by an obligation under international law.⁸⁴⁷ Draft conclusion 15 is based on the understanding that unilateral acts may, under certain conditions described below, establish obligations for the State performing the unilateral act. The first paragraph of draft conclusion 15 addresses those cases in which the unilateral act, at the time of its performance, is in conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). It provides that, in such cases, the unilateral act does not create any such obligation. This consequence of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) mirrors those in the first sentence of draft conclusion 10 and the first paragraph of draft conclusion 14 of the present draft conclusions, namely that no obligations come into existence at all.

(2) The first paragraph of draft conclusion 15 is inspired by article 53 of the 1969 Vienna Convention.⁸⁴⁸ The Commission, in its guiding principles applicable to unilateral declarations of States capable of creating legal obligations, formulated the rule in the following terms: “A unilateral declaration which is in conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law is void”.⁸⁴⁹ Although the guiding principles use the phrase “is void” in the context of a declaration, the present draft conclusion uses broader phrases, “does not ⁸⁴⁶ For example, see the commentary to Part VI, as well as paragraph 4 of the commentary to conclusion 15 of the conclusions on identification of customary international law.

⁸⁴⁷ The scope of this draft conclusion is thus broader than the scope of the 2006 International Law Commission guiding principles applicable to unilateral declarations of States capable of creating legal obligations, which “relate only to unilateral acts stricto sensu, i.e. those taking the form of formal declarations formulated by a State with the intent to produce obligations under international laws” (preamble paragraph 5 of the guiding principles).

⁸⁴⁸ See the Guide to Practice on Reservations to Treaties (footnote 827 above), paragraph (18) of the commentary to guideline 3.1.5.3, stating that it was true that “the rule prohibiting derogation from a rule of jus cogens applies not only to treaty relations, but also to all legal acts, including unilateral acts”.

⁸⁴⁹ Guiding principle 8, Yearbook ... 2006, vol. II (Part Two), p. 165.

create such an obligation” and “ceases to exist”, so as to capture more fully the broader context of the draft conclusion, which is addressing unilateral acts in a broader sense. The focus is therefore on the legal obligations intended to be created by the unilateral act in question. As indicated in the first paragraph, such obligations are not created if they conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).

(3) The second paragraph concerns those cases in which a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) emerges subsequent to the creation of an obligation under international law resulting from a unilateral act. The scope of this paragraph is different from that of the first paragraph because the second paragraph refers to obligations that have already been created by a unilateral act. The second paragraph provides that such an obligation would cease to exist if, subsequent to its creation, it conflicted with a new peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). The second paragraph of draft conclusion 15 mirrors the second paragraph of draft conclusion 10 and the second paragraph of draft conclusion 14. It recognizes that, in these circumstances, obligations do come into existence but only cease to exist at the time of the emergence of a new peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). The rule in the second paragraph of draft conclusion 15 is inspired by article 64 of the 1969 Vienna Convention.

(4) The obligations arising from a unilateral act that conflict with a new peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) emerging subsequent to the performance of the unilateral act cease to exist only to the extent that such obligations are inconsistent with the new peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). As in the second paragraph of draft conclusion 14, the phrase “if and to the extent” is meant to indicate that only those aspects of the obligation in question that conflict with the peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) will cease to exist. Other aspects of the obligation would continue to exist and apply, but only if it is possible to maintain them in the absence of the aspects of the obligations that cease to exist.

(5) Draft conclusion 15 does not concern all unilateral acts, nor does it concern all acts creating obligations. It is concerned with unilateral acts by a State undertaken with the intention to create obligations only for the State itself. This draft conclusion does not concern sources of obligations, such as treaties and customary international law, which are addressed in previous draft conclusions. Similarly, it does not address reservations, which are dealt with in draft conclusion 13. Moreover, draft conclusion 15 does not cover other acts in conflict with peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), which are addressed by other draft conclusions concerning responsibility for wrongful acts under international law. For example, a unilateral act that is not intended to create obligations on the State but that, nonetheless, constitutes a breach of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) is subject to draft conclusions 17, 18, 19 and 22 of the present draft conclusions. Draft conclusion 15 concerns only those unilateral acts by which a State manifests the intention to unilaterally assume obligations and not other acts.⁸⁵⁰

(6) The first paragraph of draft conclusion 15 describes the unilateral act under consideration as one “manifesting the intention to be bound by an obligation under international law”. The State performing the unilateral act must thus intend to establish obligations under international law. This requires an ascertainment of the intention of the State performing a unilateral act. In Frontier Dispute (Burkina Faso/Mali), the International Court of Justice determined that whether a unilateral act could create obligations “all depends on the intention of the State in question”.⁸⁵¹ The words “manifesting the intention” intend to convey that, although it is the subjective intention of the State that is sought, this intention has to be determined from the overall facts and circumstances of each particular case.⁸⁵² The subjective intention is therefore to be sought by relying on objective facts. In the words of the International Court of Justice, whether a unilateral act was intended to create a legal obligation is to be “ascertained by interpretation of the act”.⁸⁵³ Likewise, the second paragraph of draft conclusion 15 only applies to unilateral acts as described in paragraph (5).

⁸⁵⁰ Ibid., commentary to guiding principle 2.

⁸⁵¹ Case Concerning Frontier Dispute (Burkina Faso/Republic of Mali), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1986, p. 554, at p. 573, para. 39. See also Nuclear Tests (Australia v. France), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1974, p. 253, at p. 267, para. 43 (“When it is the intention of the State making the declaration that it should become bound according to its terms, that intention confers on the declaration the character of a legal undertaking, the State being thenceforth legally required to follow a course of conduct consistent with the declaration”).

(7) Draft conclusion 15 applies to unilateral acts of States. Unilateral acts of international organizations that create or are intended to create obligations for that international organization are addressed in draft conclusion 16. The fact that draft conclusion 15 applies to unilateral acts of States is without prejudice to the possible legal consequences of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) for unilateral acts of non-State actors.

(8) The application of draft conclusion 15 is to be read together with the interpretative rule set out in draft conclusion 20 and the procedural requirements set forth in draft conclusion 21.

Conclusion 16

Obligations created by resolutions, decisions or other acts of international organizations conflicting with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens)

A resolution, decision or other act of an international organization that would otherwise have binding effect does not create obligations under international law if and to the extent that they conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).

Commentary

(1) Draft conclusion 16 concerns the legal consequences of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) for resolutions, decisions and other acts of international organizations.

(2) Draft conclusion 16 applies to resolutions, decisions or other acts of international organizations whatever their designation. The phrase “resolution, decision or other act” of an international organization is intended to convey the same meaning as the description of “resolution” in paragraph (2) of the commentary to draft conclusion 12 of the draft conclusions on identification of customary international law.⁸⁵⁴ It also covers unilateral acts of international organizations manifesting an intention to be bound. The words “that would otherwise have binding effect” serve to limit the scope of the draft conclusion to resolutions, decisions and acts of international organizations that would ordinarily have binding effect, but for the conflict with the peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). Examples of a resolution, decision or act of an international organization that would otherwise have binding effect include a decision in a resolution of the Security Council, taken under chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,⁸⁵⁵ or a decision of the General Assembly admitting a State to become a member of the Organization. The question of whether such a decision has binding effect (or is one that would otherwise have binding effect) is to be determined by an interpretation of the relevant decision.⁸⁵⁶ The European ⁸⁵² Frontier Dispute (see footnote 851 above), para. 40.

⁸⁵³ Nuclear Tests (see footnote 851 above), para. 44.

⁸⁵⁴ See paragraph (2) of the commentary to draft conclusion 12 of the draft conclusions on identification of customary international law. See report of the International Law Commission on the work of its seventieth session, Official Records of the General Assembly, Seventy-third Session, Supplement No. 10 (A/73/10), p. 147.

⁸⁵⁵ By virtue of Article 25 of the Charter of the United Nations, which provides that the “Members of the United Nations agree to accept and carry out the decisions of the Security Council”, the decisions of the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter are binding.

⁸⁵⁶ Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia (see footnote 793 above), p. 53, para. 114 (“The language of a resolution of the Security Council should be carefully analysed before a conclusion can be made as to its binding effect. In view of the nature of the powers under Article 25, the question whether they have been in fact exercised is to be determined in each case, having regard to the terms of the resolution to be interpreted, the discussions leading to Union also produces acts in the form of directives, regulations and decisions, which are binding on Member States. Other international organizations, such as the International Civil Aviation Organization, the African Union and the World Trade Organization may also produce resolutions, decisions or other acts that, but for the rule set forth in this draft conclusion, would have binding effect. Draft conclusion 16 is thus meant to be broad, covering all resolutions, decisions and acts that would otherwise establish obligations under international law.

(3) Following the language of draft conclusions 14 and 15, draft conclusion 16 states that resolutions, decisions and other acts, as described in paragraph (2), do not create obligations under international law if and to the extent that such obligations conflict with peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). As in the second paragraph of draft conclusion 14 and the second paragraph of draft conclusion 15, the words “if and to the extent” are meant to indicate that only those obligations that conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) will be affected by the operation of the draft conclusion. Other obligations not in conflict with peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) will not be affected by the operation of draft conclusion 16. Provisions in a resolution, decision or other act of an international organization that are not in conflict with the peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) will continue to apply if they are separable.

(4) The rule in draft conclusion 16, that a resolution, decision or act does not create obligations under international law if those obligations conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), follows from the hierarchical superiority of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). If rules of international law that are inconsistent with peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) cannot be created through treaties, customary international law and unilateral acts, it follows that such rules cannot be created through resolutions, decisions or other acts of international organizations either. Resolutions, decisions or acts of the Security Council, however, require additional consideration since, pursuant to Article 103 of the Charter of the United Nations, obligations under the Charter prevail over other rules of international law.⁸⁵⁷ For this reason, considering the hierarchical superiority of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), the Commission considered it important to highlight that draft conclusion 16 applies equally to binding resolutions, decisions and acts of the Security Council.⁸⁵⁸

it, the Charter provisions invoked and, in general, all circumstances that might assist in determining the legal consequences of the resolution of the Security Council”).

⁸⁵⁷ Article 103 of the Charter of the United Nations provides that “[i]n the event of a conflict between the obligations of the Members of the United Nations under the present Charter and their obligations under any other international agreement, their obligations under the present Charter shall prevail”. While this provision speaks only of international agreements, it has been interpreted as applying to customary international law and certainly to resolutions, decisions and acts of other international organizations. See, for discussion, the report of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law: difficulties arising from the diversification and expansion of international law (finalized by Martti Koskeniemi) (A/CN.4/L.682, Corr.1 and Add.1), paras. 344–345, especially at para. 345 (“Therefore it seems sound to join the prevailing opinion that Article 103 should be read extensively – so as to affirm that [C]harter obligations prevail also over United Nations Member States’ customary law obligations”).

⁸⁵⁸ For the statements by States, see for example, Switzerland, on behalf of Germany, Sweden and Switzerland (“some courts have also expressed their willingness to ensure that Security Council decisions comply with” peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), “from which neither the Member States nor the United Nations may derogate” (S/PV.5446, p. 28); Qatar (while, by virtue of Article 103 of the Charter, obligations flowing from Security Council resolutions supersede other obligations, this did not apply to peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) (S/PV.5779, p. 23). See also Argentina and Nigeria (S/PV.5474, p. 20; and S/PV.5474 (Resumption 1), p. 19, respectively); Finland, speaking on behalf of the Nordic countries (Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden), observed that there was a “widely held view that the powers of the Security Council, albeit exceptionally wide, were limited by the peremptory norms of international law” (A/C.6/60/SR.18, para. 18); and Iran (Islamic Republic of) (A/C.6/66/SR.7, para. 84). For other views by States, see the United States (A/C.6/60/SR.20, para. 36), which cautioned that “general

(5) The application of the rule in draft conclusion 16 has to be read together with the interpretative rule set out in draft conclusion 20 and the procedural requirements laid down in draft conclusion 21.

Conclusion 17

Peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) as obligations owed to the international community as a whole (obligations erga omnes)

1. Peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) give rise to obligations owed to the international community as a whole (obligations erga omnes), in which all States have a legal interest.
2. Any State is entitled to invoke the responsibility of another State for a breach of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), in accordance with the rules on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.

Commentary

(1) Draft conclusion 17 addresses obligations erga omnes. It consists of two paragraphs. The first paragraph states that the peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) give rise to obligations owed to the international community as a whole (obligations erga omnes). The relationship between peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) and obligations erga omnes has been recognized in the practice of States. The Democratic Republic of the Congo (formerly known as Zaire), for example, in a statement in the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly, proposed a treaty on the prohibition of the use of force and stated that the proposed treaty should have an erga omnes effect in view of the fact that the prohibition of the use of force was a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).⁸⁵⁹ Similarly, the Czech Republic stated that “jus cogens obligations were erga omnes obligations, which did not allow for any derogation, including by means of an agreement”.⁸⁶⁰ The Federal Court of Australia, in Nulyarimma and Others v. Thompson, also accepted the contention of the parties that “the prohibition of genocide is a peremptory norm of customary international law (jus cogens) giving rise to non derogable obligations erga omnes that is, enforcement obligations owed by each nation State to the international community as a whole”.⁸⁶¹ Similarly, in Kane v. Winn, the United States District Court of Massachusetts determined that “the prohibition pronouncements about the relationship” between peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) and Security Council resolutions “should be avoided” and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland (A/C.6/73/SR.27, para. 73, citing to para. 5 of the annex to the written statement) stated that there is no “State practice to support the contention that a State can refuse to comply with a binding [Security Council] resolution based on an assertion of a breach of a jus cogens norm” and the Russian Federation (A/C.6/73/SR.26, para. 131), which emphasized that discussions on the issue of Security Council resolutions in connection with jus cogens norms “were not based on any practice”, and that the draft conclusion could be misinterpreted in a way “which would undermine the activities of the Security Council”. For the views of Courts see, e.g. R (On the Application of Al-Jedda) v. Secretary of State for Defence, Appeal Judgment of 12 December 2007, House of Lords [2008] 3 All ER 28 (Lord Bingham), para. 35; Youssef Nada v. State Secretariat for Economic Affairs and Federal Department of Economic Affairs (see footnote 698 above), para. 7 (“Yet jus cogens, the peremptory law binding on all subjects of international law, marks the limit of the obligation to apply resolutions of the Security Council. For this reason, it must be determined whether, as the petitioner asserts, the resolutions of the Security Council containing the sanctions violate jus cogens”) (original in German, translation courtesy of Oxford Reports on International Law in Domestic Courts); Tadić, Judgment, 15 July 1999 (footnote 152 above), para. 296; Yassin Abdullah Kadi v. Council of the European Union and Commission of the European Communities (see footnote 719 above), para. 226 (on appeal, European Court did not address the matter).

⁸⁵⁹ Zaire (A/C.6/35/SR.32, para. 38). See also the statement of the Netherlands at the 25th meeting of the Sixth Committee during the forty-ninth session of the General Assembly, in which it stated that “an international crime would always involve a breach of a jus cogens or erga omnes obligation” (A/C.6/49/SR.25, para. 38).

⁸⁶⁰ See also the Czech Republic (A/C.6/49/SR.26, para. 19) and Burkina Faso (A/C.6/54/SR.26).

⁸⁶¹ Nulyarimma and Others v. Thompson, Appeal Decision of 1 September 1999, [1999] FCA 1192, 165 ALR 621, 96 FCR 153, ILDC 2773 (AU 1999), para. 81.

against torture” is an obligation erga omnes that, “as [a] jus cogens norm[s] ... [is] ‘non-derogable and peremptory.’”⁸⁶²

(2) The International Court of Justice has not explicitly pronounced that a link exists between peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) and obligations erga omnes. Nevertheless, such a link could be deduced from some of its judgments and advisory opinions. First, every norm described by the Court⁸⁶³ as one having an erga omnes character is also one that has been included in the non-exhaustive list of norms previously referred to by the Commission as having peremptory status. This list is reproduced in the annex to the present draft conclusions. Second, the Court has applied the legal consequences under article 41 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts (which concern breaches of peremptory norms) to breaches of such erga omnes obligations.⁸⁶⁴ The Commission itself has been more explicit in recognizing a close relationship between obligations erga omnes and peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).⁸⁶⁵ The relationship between peremptory norms and obligations erga omnes has also been recognized in scholarly writings.⁸⁶⁶

⁸⁶² Kane v. Winn, 31 F. Supp. 2d 162, 199 (D. Mass. 2004). See also R and Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and Secretary of State for Home Affairs, Appeal Judgment of 12 October 2006 of the High Court, [2006] ALL ER (D) 138, para. 102, referring to “ius cogens erga omnes”. See also Jorgic case, J (a Bosnian Serb), Individual Complaint, Judgment of 12 December 2000 of the German Constitutional Court, 2 BvR 1290/99, ILDC 132 (DE 2000), para. 17.

⁸⁶³ See, for example, Legal Consequences of the Separation of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965, Advisory Opinion of 25 February 2019, para. 180 (viewing the right to self-determination as having an erga omnes character). See also East Timor (Portugal v. Australia) (footnote 805 above), p. 102, para. 29, in which the Court described the statement that self-determination had an erga omnes character as being “irreproachable”. In Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Croatia v. Serbia), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 2015, p. 3, at p. 47, para. 87, the Court affirmed “that the Genocide Convention contains obligations erga omnes” and “that the prohibition of Genocide has the character of a peremptory norm (jus cogens)”. See Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (footnote 805 above), paras. 88, 149 and 155; and Barcelona Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited (footnote 805 above), p. 32, paras. 33–34, in which the Court determined “obligations [that] derive ... from the outlawing of acts of aggression, and of genocide ... protection from slavery and racial discrimination”. See also conclusion (33) of the conclusions of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law (A/CN.4/L.702, p. 21). The conclusions also appear in Yearbook ... 2006, vol. II (Part Two), para. 251.

⁸⁶⁴ See draft articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts (Yearbook ... 2001, vol. II (Part Two) and corrigendum, para. 76, and the commentaries thereto, para. 77). The articles also appear in General Assembly resolution 56/83 of 12 December 2001, annex, as modified by A/56/49(Vol. D)/Corr.4. See, in particular, Legal Consequences of the Separation of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965 (footnote 863 above), para. 180 and Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (footnote 805 above), para. 159.

⁸⁶⁵ See Part Two, chapter III, of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, especially paragraph (4) of the general commentary to that chapter, in which “the recognition of the concept of peremptory norms of international law” is said to be a development “closely related” to obligations erga omnes, and paragraph (7) of the general commentary, in which the Commission states that “there is at the very least substantial overlap between” obligations erga omnes and peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).

⁸⁶⁶ See, for example, M. Cherif Bassiouni, “International crimes: jus cogens and obligatio erga omnes”, Law and Contemporary Problems, vol. 59, No. 4 (1996), p. 63; I. Scobbie, “The invocation of responsibility for the breach of ‘obligations under peremptory norms of general international law’”, European Journal of International Law, vol. 13, No. 5 (2002), p. 1210 (“Following Barcelona Traction, the Commission has taken the view that peremptory norms and obligations ‘owed to the international community as a whole’ are essentially two sides of the one coin”); F. Forrest Martin, “Delineating a hierarchical outline of international law sources and norms”, Saskatchewan Law Review, vol. 65 (2002), p. 353; S. Villalpando, L’émergence de la communauté internationale dans de la Responsabilité des États (Paris, Presses Universitaires de France, 2005), p. 106; C. Tomuschat, “Reconceptualizing the debate ...” (footnote 728 above), p. 430; A. Pellet, “Conclusions”, in Tomuschat and Thouvenin (ibid.).

(3) Although all peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) give rise to obligations erga omnes, it is widely considered that not all obligations erga omnes arise from peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).⁸⁶⁷ For example, certain rules relating to common spaces, in particular common heritage regimes, may produce erga omnes obligations independent of whether they have peremptory status.

(4) The first paragraph of draft conclusion 17 is intended to capture, in a general way, the relationship described above between peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) and obligations erga omnes. It states that peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) “give rise to” obligations erga omnes. This wording is based on the Commission’s articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, in which obligations erga omnes are described as those obligations which “arise under peremptory norms of general international law”.⁸⁶⁸ The phrase “in which all States have a legal interest” describes the main consequence of the erga omnes character of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).⁸⁶⁹ The words “legal interest” encompasses the protection of the legal norm as such, including rights and obligations.

(5) The second paragraph of draft conclusion 17 builds on the first paragraph by describing a distinct consequence of the connection between obligations erga omnes and peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). It describes, in more precise terms, the implications of the phrase “in which all States have a legal interest” in the first paragraph. This consequence is that any State is entitled to invoke the responsibility of another State for the latter’s breach of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). The words used in the second paragraph of draft conclusion 17 follow the text of article 48 of the Commission’s articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, which provides that “[a]ny State ... is entitled to invoke the responsibility of another State ... if ... the obligation breached is owed to the international community as a whole”.⁸⁷⁰ Although draft conclusion 17 refers to “the responsibility of another State”, it is without prejudice to the responsibility of international organizations. It will be recalled that, under article 49 of the articles on the responsibility of international organizations, a State or an international organization is entitled to invoke the responsibility of an international organization for the breach by that international organization of an obligation owed to the international community of States as a whole.

(6) According to the second paragraph of draft conclusion 17, the right of a State to invoke the responsibility of another State for the latter’s breach of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) is to be exercised in accordance with the rules on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts. This qualification is intended to emphasize the distinction between the invocation of responsibility by an injured State and the invocation of responsibility by any other State. Under the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, the right of an injured State to invoke the responsibility of another State for the breach of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) is to be exercised according to article 42; whereas third States are entitled to invoke the responsibility for such a breach under article 48.⁸⁷¹ When invoking the responsibility of another State in its capacity as an injured State, the injured State is entitled to claim all the forms of reparations provided for in chapter II of Part Two of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts. However, a State other than an injured State that invokes the responsibility of another State for the latter’s breach of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) may only claim “cessation of the internationally wrongful act, and assurances and guarantees of non-repetition”.⁸⁷² A State

⁸⁶⁷ See, for example, Villalpando (footnote 866 above) and Forrest Martin (footnote 866 above).

⁸⁶⁸ Articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, paragraph (7) of the general commentary to Part Two, chapter III.

⁸⁶⁹ Legal Consequences of the Separation of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965 (see footnote 863 above), para. 180 (“all States have a legal interest in protecting that right”); Barcelona Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited (see footnote 805 above), p. 32, para. 33 (“all States can be held to have a legal interest in their protection”).

⁸⁷⁰ Ibid., art. 48, para. 1 (b).

⁸⁷¹ Ibid., paragraph (1) of the commentary to article 48.

⁸⁷² Ibid., art. 48, para. 2 (a).

other than an injured State, may only claim reparations “in the interest of the injured State or of the beneficiaries of the obligation breached” and not for its own benefit.⁸⁷³

Conclusion 18
Peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) and circumstances precluding wrongfulness

No circumstance precluding wrongfulness under the rules on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts may be invoked with regard to any act of a State that is not in conformity with an obligation arising under a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).

Commentary

(1) Draft conclusion 18 addresses circumstances precluding wrongfulness in relation to a breach of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). As a general rule, the existence of certain circumstances can serve to preclude the wrongfulness of an act of a State that would otherwise be unlawful.⁸⁷⁴ Draft conclusion 18 sets out an exception to this general rule on State responsibility by providing that where the breach in question concerns a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), the circumstances precluding wrongfulness may not be invoked.

(2) Draft conclusion 18 is based on article 26 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, which excludes the invocation of grounds precluding wrongfulness as spelt in chapter V of Part One of the articles for any act that is not in conformity with an obligation arising under a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). The effect of this rule is that, where the responsibility of a State for a breach of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) is invoked, the State against which the breach is invoked cannot seek to excuse itself from responsibility by raising any circumstance that might ordinarily preclude wrongfulness. This applies even where the circumstance precluding wrongfulness itself involves a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). As the Commission has previously stated, a genocide cannot be invoked as a justification for the commission of a counter-genocide.⁸⁷⁵

(3) Draft conclusion 18 is without prejudice to the invocation of such circumstances by international organizations and other entities. Article 26 of the articles on the responsibility of international organizations also provides that the wrongfulness of an act of an international organization not in conformity with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) will not be precluded by the invocation of a circumstance precluding the wrongfulness of that act.

Conclusion 19
Particular consequences of serious breaches of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)

1. States shall cooperate to bring to an end through lawful means any serious breach by a State of an obligation arising under a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).

2. No State shall recognize as lawful a situation created by a serious breach by a State of an obligation arising under a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), nor render aid or assistance in maintaining that situation.

3. A breach of an obligation arising under a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) is serious if it involves a gross or systematic failure by the responsible State to fulfil that obligation.

⁸⁷³ Ibid., art. 48, para. 2 (b).

⁸⁷⁴ Ibid., see generally Part One, chapter V. Paragraph (1) of the general commentary to Part One, chapter V, states that the existence of these grounds “provides a shield against an otherwise well-founded claim for the breach of an international obligation”.

⁸⁷⁵ Ibid., paragraph (4) of the commentary to article 26.

4. This draft conclusion is without prejudice to the other consequences that a serious breach by a State of an obligation arising under a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) may entail under international law.

Commentary

(1) Draft conclusion 19 concerns particular consequences of serious breaches of obligations arising under peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). It is based on article 41 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts. Draft conclusion 19 is concerned only with “additional consequences” arising from serious breaches of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).⁸⁷⁶ It does not address consequences arising from breaches of rules of international law that are not of a peremptory character nor does it address the consequences of breaches of peremptory norms that are not serious in nature.

(2) The first particular consequence of serious breaches of obligations arising under peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) is provided in the first paragraph of draft conclusion 19. The first paragraph of draft conclusion 19, which is based on article 41, paragraph 1, of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, provides that States shall cooperate to bring to an end serious breaches of obligations arising under peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). The obligation to “cooperate to bring to an end through lawful means” serious breaches of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) builds upon the general obligation to cooperate under international law.⁸⁷⁷ Although at the time of the adoption of its articles on the law of treaties, the Commission expressed some doubt as to whether the obligation expressed in paragraph 1 of article 41 constituted customary international law,⁸⁷⁸ the obligation to cooperate to bring to an end serious breaches of obligations arising under peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) is now recognized under international law. The United Kingdom House of Lords in A, Amnesty International (intervening) and Commonwealth Lawyers Association (intervening) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, for example, referred explicitly to the obligation under international law “to cooperate to bring to an end through lawful means any serious breach of an obligation under a peremptory norm of general international law”, and cited both article 41 of the Commission’s articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts and the Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice on Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory.⁸⁷⁹ The Commission has recognized the obligation, albeit just in general terms in its draft articles on the protection of persons in the event of disasters.⁸⁸⁰ The International Court of Justice, in its Advisory Opinion on Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, has, since the adoption of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, determined that there is an obligation to cooperate to bring to an end breaches of “obligations to respect the right ... to self-determination, and ⁸⁷⁶ Ibid., paragraph (7) of the general commentary to Part Two, chapter III.

⁸⁷⁷ See, for example, the Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, General Assembly resolution 2625 (XXV) of 24 October 1970, annex, para. 1 (“States have the duty to cooperate with one another, irrespective of the differences in their political, economic and social systems, in the various spheres of international relations, in order to maintain international peace and security and to promote international economic stability and progress, the general welfare of nations and international cooperation free from discrimination based on such differences”).

⁸⁷⁸ See paragraph (3) of the commentary to article 41 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.

⁸⁷⁹ A, Amnesty International (intervening) and Commonwealth Lawyers Association (intervening) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, Judgment of the House of Lords of 8 December 2005 [2006] 1 All ER 575, para. 34.

⁸⁸⁰ See draft articles on the protection of persons in the event of disasters, with commentaries (report of the International Law Commission on the work of its sixty-eighth session, Official Records of the General Assembly, Seventy-first Session, Supplement No. 10 (A/71/10)), paragraph (1) of the commentary to draft article 7 (“The duty to cooperate is well established as a principle of international law and can be found in numerous international instruments”).

certain ... obligations under international humanitarian law”,⁸⁸¹ norms that are widely cited as peremptory. The Court determined that one of the obligations arising from the breaches of such obligations was an obligation on other States “while respecting the United Nations Charter and international law, to see to it that any impediment, resulting from” the breaches are “brought to an end”.⁸⁸² Similarly, in the Advisory Opinion on Legal Consequences of the Separation of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965, the Court determined that all States “must cooperate with the United Nations” to bring to an end the breach of obligations arising from the right of self-determination.⁸⁸³ Similarly, in the Case of La Cantuta v. Peru, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights identified “the duty of cooperation among States for” the purpose of eradicating breaches as itself a consequence of breaches of obligations arising under peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).⁸⁸⁴

(3) The obligation to cooperate to bring to an end serious breaches of obligations arising under peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) is to be carried out “through lawful means”. This means that the breach of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) may not serve as a justification for the breach of other rules of international law. Although international law does not prohibit unilateral measures to bring to an end a serious breach of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) if such unilateral measures are consistent with international law, the emphasis in the first paragraph of draft conclusion 19 is on collective measures. This is the essence of “cooperation”.⁸⁸⁵

(4) Depending on the type of breach and the type of peremptory norm in question, the collective system of the United Nations is the preferred framework for cooperative action. It is for this reason that, in the light of the determination by the International Court of Justice of a breach of “self-determination” and “basic principles of humanitarian law”, the Court stated that “the United Nations, and especially the General Assembly and the Security Council, should consider what further action is required to bring to an end the illegal situation”.⁸⁸⁶ Similarly, in its advisory opinion on Legal Consequences of the Separation of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965, the Court referred to the obligation of “all Member States” to “cooperate with the United Nations” to end the breach in question.⁸⁸⁷ Collective measures under other international organizations with a mandate may also be taken to bring to an end serious breaches of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). Another example of an organization whose mandate permits it to take measures to bring to an end breaches of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) is the African Union.⁸⁸⁸ However, it is not only measures under institutionalized cooperation mechanisms that may be adopted. The obligation to cooperate to bring to an end serious breaches of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) may also be implemented through non-institutionalized cooperation, including

⁸⁸¹ Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (see footnote 805 above), para. 155.

⁸⁸² Ibid., para. 159.

⁸⁸³ Legal Consequences of the Separation of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965 (see footnote 863 above), para. 182.

⁸⁸⁴ Case of La Cantuta v. Peru, Merits, Reparations and Costs, Judgment of 29 November 2006, Inter-American Court of Human Rights, para. 160 (“As pointed out repeatedly, the acts involved in the instant case have violated peremptory norms of international law (jus cogens). ... In view of the nature and seriousness of the events ... the need to eradicate impunity reveals itself to the international community as a duty of cooperation among states”).

⁸⁸⁵ See, for example, paragraph (3) of the commentary to article 41 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts (“What is called for in the face of serious breaches is a joint and coordinated effort by all States to counteract the effects of these breaches”).

⁸⁸⁶ Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (see footnote 805 above), para. 160.

⁸⁸⁷ Legal Consequences of the Separation of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965 (see footnote 863 above), para. 182.

⁸⁸⁸ See article 4 (h) of the Constitutive Act of the African Union (2000), which permits the African Union to intervene to bring to an end breaches of the prohibition of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes.

through ad hoc arrangements by a group of States acting together to bring to an end a breach of a peremptory norm.⁸⁸⁹ Indeed, the International Court of Justice, in its advisory opinion on Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, seems to suggest that, over and above collective action, there is an obligation on individual States to make efforts to bring situations created by the breach to an end.⁸⁹⁰ In that opinion, in addition to referring to the measures that may be adopted by the General Assembly and the Security Council, the Court stated that “[i]t is also for all States” to take measures to end the breach of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). The requirement, however, is that such measures should be consistent with international law.⁸⁹¹

(5) The obligation of States to act collectively to bring to an end serious breaches of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) has particular consequences for cooperation within the organs of the United Nations and other international organizations. It means that, in the face of serious breaches of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), international organizations should act, within their respective mandates and when permitted to do so under international law, to bring to an end such breaches. Thus, where an international organization has the discretion to act, the obligation to cooperate imposes a duty on the members of that international organization to act with a view to the organization exercising that discretion in a manner to bring to an end the breach of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). A duty of international organizations to exercise discretion in a manner that is intended to bring to an end serious breaches of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) is a necessary corollary of the obligation to cooperate provided for in the first paragraph of draft conclusion 19.

(6) The second paragraph of draft conclusion 19 states that States shall not “recognize as lawful” a situation created by a breach of an obligation arising under a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) nor “render aid or assistance” in the maintenance of such a situation. The second paragraph of draft conclusion 19, which is derived from article 41, paragraph 2, of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, contains two separate obligations. The first is the obligation not to recognize as lawful situations created by a serious breach of a peremptory norm of international law (jus cogens). The second is the obligation not to render aid or assistance in maintaining the situation created by the serious breach of a peremptory norm of international law (jus cogens). While these two obligations are separate and distinct obligations, they are related in the sense that the obligation of non-assistance is a logical consequence of the obligation of non-recognition of a situation as lawful. Unlike the obligation in the first paragraph of draft conclusion 19, the duties of non-recognition and non-assistance are negative duties. In other words, while the first paragraph of draft conclusion 19 requires States to do something, i.e. to cooperate to bring to an end serious breaches of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), the duties of non-recognition and non-assistance in the second paragraph require States to refrain from acting. The duties in the second paragraph of draft conclusion 19 are thus less onerous.

(7) Already in 2001, the Commission had recognized that the duties of non-recognition and non-assistance were part of customary international law.⁸⁹² In Kuwait Airways Corporation v. Iraqi Airways Company and Others, the United Kingdom House of Lords refused to give legal validity to acts resulting from the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait – a breach of the peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) relating to the use of ⁸⁸⁹ See paragraph (2) of the commentary to article 41 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.

⁸⁹⁰ Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (see footnote 805 above), para. 159.

⁸⁹¹ Ibid. (“It is also for all States, while respecting the United Nations Charter and international law, to see to it that any impediment, resulting from construction of the wall, to the exercise by the Palestinian people of its right to self-determination is brought to an end”) (emphasis added).

⁸⁹² See paragraphs (6), (11) and (12) of the commentary to article 41 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.

force.⁸⁹³ The obligation of non-recognition had been recognized in decisions of the International Court of Justice and in the practice of States acting in international organizations. In its advisory opinion on Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia (South West Africa) notwithstanding Security Council Resolution 276 (1970), for example, the Court recalled that “qualification of a situation as illegal does not by itself put an end to” the situation.⁸⁹⁴ The Court held that there was an obligation on third States “to recognize the illegality and invalidity of South Africa’s continued presence”.⁸⁹⁵ Similarly, in its advisory opinion on Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, the Court determined that “all States are under an obligation not to recognize the illegal situation resulting from” the breach of an obligation widely recognized as having peremptory character.⁸⁹⁶ The Security Council has also recognized the obligation on States not to recognize the situation created by a breach of the prohibition of apartheid and the obligation to respect self-determination.⁸⁹⁷ The obligation of non-recognition of acts that are in breach of obligations that arise under the peremptory norms of the right of self-determination and the prohibition of apartheid can also be seen in the General Assembly resolution calling for non-recognition of the Bantustans created by South Africa in the furtherance of apartheid in violation of the right to self-determination.⁸⁹⁸ The obligation not to assist or render aid to the maintenance of a situation created by a serious breach of an obligation arising under a peremptory norm has also been recognized in the decisions of the International Court of Justice and resolutions of the United Nations.⁸⁹⁹

(8) While the obligation of non-recognition is settled, this duty is not to be implemented to the detriment of the affected population and deprive it of any advantages derived from international cooperation.⁹⁰⁰ In its Advisory Opinion on Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia, the International Court of Justice declared that the consequences of non-recognition should not negatively affect or disadvantage the affected population and, consequently, that acts related to the civilian population, such as registration of births, deaths and marriages, ought to be recognized notwithstanding the breach.⁹⁰¹

(9) The obligations in draft conclusion 19 apply only to serious breaches of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). A serious breach is defined in the third paragraph of draft conclusion 19 as a breach that “involves a gross or systematic failure by the responsible State to fulfil that obligation” in question. This definition is taken from article 40, paragraph 2, of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.⁹⁰² A view was expressed that the word “serious” should be omitted from the ⁸⁹³ Kuwait Airways Corporation v. Iraqi Airways Company and Others (Nos. 4 and 5) [2002] UKHL 19, [2002] 2 AC 883, para. 29. See also A, Amnesty International (intervening) and Commonwealth Lawyers Association (intervening) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department (footnote 879), para. 34.

⁸⁹⁴ Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia (see footnote 793 above), para. 111.

⁸⁹⁵ Ibid., para. 119.

⁸⁹⁶ Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (see footnote 805 above), para. 159.

⁸⁹⁷ See Security Council resolution 276 (1970) of 30 January 1970.

⁸⁹⁸ General Assembly resolution 3411 D (XXX) of 28 November 1975, para. 3.

⁸⁹⁹ See, for example, Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia (footnote 793 above), para. 119, stating that States are under an obligation “to refrain from lending any support or any form of assistance to South Africa with reference to its occupation of Namibia”. See also Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (footnote 805 above), para. 159; and General Assembly resolution 3411 D (XXX), para. 3.

⁹⁰⁰ Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia (see footnote 793 above), para. 125.

⁹⁰¹ Ibid.

⁹⁰² A detailed elaboration of the elements of seriousness, i.e. gross or systematic violations, can be found in paragraphs (7) and (8) of the commentary to article 40 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.

text of draft conclusion 19, inter alia, since the duties of non-recognition and non-assistance were not onerous.

(10) The fourth paragraph of draft conclusion 19 provides that the obligations in draft conclusion 19 are without prejudice to other consequences that serious breaches may entail under international law.⁹⁰³ Draft conclusion 19, for example, does not specifically address the consequences of the breach for the responsible State. The International Court of Justice has routinely declared an obligation of cessation on the responsible State.⁹⁰⁴ Other examples of consequences of breaches of obligations under international law that are not addressed can be found in chapters I and II of Part Two of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.⁹⁰⁵ Although not addressed in the present draft conclusions, these other consequences of responsibility continue to apply.

(11) As with draft conclusions 17 and 18, draft conclusion 19 is without prejudice to the application of the duties in draft conclusion 19 to international organizations.⁹⁰⁶

Conclusion 20

Interpretation and application consistent with peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)

Where it appears that there may be a conflict between a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) and another rule of international law, the latter is, as far as possible, to be interpreted and applied so as to be consistent with the former.

Commentary

(1) Draft conclusion 20 contains an interpretative rule applicable in the case of potential conflicts between peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) and other rules of international law. Draft conclusions 10, 14, 15 and 16 provide for the invalidity or non-existence of rules of international law that conflict with peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). Whether or not a rule of international law conflicts with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) is a matter to be determined through interpretation. The rule in draft conclusion 20 applies as part of the process of interpretation under applicable rules on interpretation.

(2) Draft conclusion 20 is not to be applied in all cases concerning the interpretation of a rule or the determination of its content. It is to be applied only in the limited instances where “it appears that there may be a conflict” between a rule of international law not of a peremptory character and a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). In such a case, the interpreter is directed to interpret the rule of international law that is not of a peremptory character in such a way that it is consistent with the peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). The words “as far as possible” in the draft conclusion are intended to emphasize that, in the exercise of interpreting rules of international law in a manner consistent with peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), the bounds of interpretation may not be exceeded. In other words, the rule in question may not be given a meaning or content that does not flow from the normal application of the rules and methodology of interpretation in order to achieve consistency.

⁹⁰³ See generally paragraph (13) of the commentary to article 41 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.

⁹⁰⁴ See, for example, Legal Consequences of the Separation of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965 (footnote 863 above), para. 178; Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (footnote 805 above), para. 149 et seq.; and Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia (footnote 793 above), para. 118.

⁹⁰⁵ See generally, Part Two of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts. The consequences include cessation and non-repetition (art. 30) and reparation (art. 31). Reparations themselves may take different forms, including restitution (art. 35), compensation (art. 36), satisfaction (art. 37) and interest (art. 38).

⁹⁰⁶ See, in respect of international organizations, articles 41 and 42 of the articles on the responsibility of international organizations. The draft articles and the commentaries thereto appear in Yearbook ... 2011, vol. II (Part Two), paras. 87–88. The articles themselves appear in the annex to General Assembly resolution 66/100 of 9 December 2011.

(3) Draft conclusion 20 uses the words “interpreted and applied”. The interpretation and application of a rule are interrelated but separate concepts. The words “interpretation and application” were also used in paragraph (3) of the commentary to article 26 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, which addressed this interpretative effect of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). It recognizes that, in some cases, what may be at issue is not the interpretation of the rule in question but its application. This may be the case, for example, where a rule is, on its face, consistent with the relevant peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), but its application in a particular way, would be contrary to the relevant peremptory norm.

(4) In the context of treaty rules, the rule in draft conclusion 20 may be seen as an application of article 31, paragraph 3 (c), of the 1969 Vienna Convention, which provides that in the interpretation of treaties “[a]ny relevant rules of international law applicable in the relations between the parties” “shall be taken into account”. Peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) are rules of international law applicable in relations primarily between States and international organizations and must therefore, where relevant, be taken into account in the interpretation of treaties.⁹⁰⁷

(5) Although the interpretative rule in draft conclusion 20 constitutes a concrete application of article 31, paragraph 3 (c), of the 1969 Vienna Convention, it does not apply only in relation to treaties but to the interpretation and application of all other rules of international law. In this respect, the Commission has stated that “when there is an apparent conflict between primary obligations, one of which arises for a State directly under a peremptory norm of general international law, it is evident that such an obligation must prevail ... peremptory norms of general international law generate strong interpretative principles which will resolve all or most apparent conflicts”.⁹⁰⁸

(6) As noted in paragraph (2) of this commentary, the words “as far as possible” are meant to indicate that the rule in this draft conclusion does not permit the limits of interpretation to be exceeded. Where it is not possible to arrive at an interpretation of the rule not of a peremptory character that is consistent with the peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens), the rule that is not of a peremptory character is to be invalidated in accordance with draft conclusions 10, 14, 15 and 16.

(7) The phrase “another rule of international law” in draft conclusion 20 is to be understood as referring to obligations under international law, whether arising under a treaty, customary international law, a general principle of law, a unilateral act or a resolution, decision or other act of an international organization. Draft conclusion 20 therefore applies in the interpretation of the rules or obligations identified in draft conclusions 10, 14, 15 and 16.

Conclusion 21 Procedural requirements

1. A State which invokes a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) as a ground for the invalidity or termination of a rule of international law is to notify other States concerned of its claim. The notification is to be in writing and ⁹⁰⁷ See, for example, the Report of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law (footnote 857 above), para. 414. This was done for example in Council of the European Union v. Front populaire pour la libération de la saquia-el-hamra et du rio de oro (Front Polisario), Case C-104/16 P, Judgment of 21 December 2016, Court of Justice of the European Union (Grand Chamber), Official Journal of the European Union, C 53/19 (20 February 2017), para. 88 et seq., especially para. 114, in which the Court, having determined that the principle of self-determination was “one of the essential principles of international law” and one establishing erga omnes obligations (para. 88), proceeded to interpret a treaty between the European Commission and Morocco in such a way as to respect this rule (“It follows that the Liberalisation Agreement could not be understood at the time of its conclusion as meaning that its territorial scope included the territory of Western Sahara” (para. 114)).

⁹⁰⁸ See paragraph (3) of the commentary to article 26 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts. See conclusion 42 of the work of the Study Group on the Fragmentation of International Law: Difficulties arising from the Diversification and Expansion of International Law (Yearbook ... 2006, vol. II, Part Two, para. 251); see also Mik (footnote 845 above), p. 73 et seq.

is to indicate the measure proposed to be taken with respect to the rule of international law in question.

2. If none of the other States concerned raises an objection within a period which, except in cases of special urgency, shall not be less than three months, the invoking State may carry out the measure which it has proposed.

3. If any State concerned raises an objection, then the States concerned are to seek a solution through the means indicated in Article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations.

4. If no solution is reached within a period of twelve months, and the objecting State or States concerned offer to submit the matter to the International Court of Justice, the invoking State may not carry out the measure which it has proposed until the dispute is resolved.

5. This draft conclusion is without prejudice to the procedural requirements set forth in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, the relevant rules concerning the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice, or other applicable dispute settlement provisions agreed by the States concerned.

Commentary

(1) Draft conclusion 21 concerns the procedure for the invocation of, and the reliance on, the invalidity of rules of international law, including treaties, by reason of being in conflict with peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). It is important to recall that during the United Nations Conference on the Law of Treaties, States generally supported the provisions relating to peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) and concerns about articles 53 and 64 arose from the concern that the right to invoke the invalidity of treaties could be abused by States unilaterally invoking articles 53 and 64 and thus threatening the stability of treaty relations.⁹⁰⁹ To address the concern, the 1969 Vienna Convention subjects any reliance on articles 53 and 64 to a process involving judicial settlement procedures.⁹¹⁰ In the context of the present draft conclusions, invocation of the rules set forth in Part Three without some type of mechanism to avoid unilateral measures raises similar concerns as those raised at the United Nations Conference on the Law of Treaties.

(2) The formulation of an appropriate provision for the purposes of the present draft conclusions is, however, not without its difficulties. The principal difficulty is that detailed dispute resolution provisions are embedded in treaties and do not operate as a matter of customary international law. Thus, with respect to peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), the 1969 Vienna Convention contains an elaborate dispute settlement framework.⁹¹¹ Under this framework, a State party that claims that a treaty is invalid on any ground, including for reason of being in conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law, must notify other State parties of its claim. If, after the expiry of a specified period, no objections to its notification are received, the consequences of invalidity may be implemented. If, however, there is an objection, the 1969 Vienna Convention requires that the State parties concerned seek a solution through the means provided for in the Charter of the United Nations. These means include negotiation, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or other peaceful means.⁹¹² If the claim of invalidity is based on a conflict with a peremptory norm under article 53 or article 64 and a solution to the conflict is not found using such means, then any party to the dispute may refer the matter to the International Court of Justice unless there is an agreement to submit it instead to arbitration.

⁹⁰⁹ Official Records of the United Nations Conference on the Law of Treaties, First Session ... (see footnote 726 above), 4 May 1968, statements by: France, 54th meeting, para. 29 (“[t]he article as it stood gave no indication how a rule of law could be recognized as having the character of jus cogens, on the content of which divergent, even conflicting interpretations had been advanced during the discussion. ... Also, no provision had been made for any jurisdictional control over the application of such a new and imprecise notion”); and Norway, 56th meeting, para. 37 (“[t]he article gave no guidance on some important questions, namely, what were the existing rules of jus cogens and how did such rules come into being? The Commission’s text stated the effects of those rules but did not define them, so that serious disputes might arise between States; and it provided no effective means of settling such disputes”).

⁹¹⁰ Ibid.

⁹¹¹ See the 1969 Vienna Convention, arts. 65 and 66.

(3) In the Gabčíkovo-Nagymaros Project case, the International Court of Justice stated that “both Parties agree that Articles 65 to 67 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, if not codifying customary international law, at least generally reflect customary international law and contain certain procedural principles which are based on an obligation to act in good faith”.⁹¹³ This observation by the Court refers primarily to the consultation process leading up to any termination of the agreement. The Court did not, by this statement, determine that there was a customary international law rule concerning the establishment of jurisdiction of the Court for the settlement of disputes relating to invalidation of treaties on the basis of the peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). The provisions of articles 65 to 67 of the 1969 Vienna Convention, in particular the provisions pertaining to the submission to the International Court of Justice of a dispute, cannot be said to reflect customary international law. As treaty provisions, they cannot be imposed on States that are not party to the 1969 Vienna Convention. Moreover, even amongst States that are party to the Convention, a number have formulated reservations to the application of the dispute settlement mechanism, particularly as it relates to the submission of disputes to the International Court of Justice and arbitration (article 66 (a) of the 1969 Vienna Convention).⁹¹⁴

(4) In formulating a provision for dispute settlement in relation to the invalidation of rules of international law on account of inconsistency with peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), the Commission had to ensure, on the one hand, that it did not purport to impose treaty rules on States that are not bound by such rules while, on the other hand, ensuring that the concerns regarding the need to avoid unilateral invalidation of rules was taken account of. Draft conclusion 21 sets out procedural requirements designed to achieve such a balance. Not every aspect of the detailed procedure set forth in draft conclusion 21 constitutes customary international law.

(5) The first three paragraphs of draft conclusion 21 follow article 65 of the 1969 Vienna Convention. The first paragraph requires that a State which seeks to impugn a rule of international law for being in conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) is to notify other States of its claim. Although this paragraph follows closely the wording of the 1969 Vienna Convention, the paragraph refers to “a rule of international law”, to signify that the procedural requirements apply to treaties and other international obligations deriving from other sources of international law. Consequently, the paragraph refers to “States concerned” to indicate that the potential addressees of the notification are broader than parties to a treaty. The first paragraph of draft conclusion 21 also provides that the notification is to indicate the measures proposed to remedy the conflict. Such measures may be those referred to in draft conclusions 10 to 13 of the draft conclusions. The requirement to specify the measures proposed is in keeping with the purposes of the notification which is to enable other States to respond appropriately, if necessary. The notification can be distributed to other States through a variety of means, including through the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

⁹¹² See the Charter of the United Nations, Article 33, paragraph 1.

⁹¹³ Gabčíkovo-Nagymaros Project (see footnote 741 above), at p. 66, para. 109.

⁹¹⁴ As of April 2019, out of a total 116 States Parties, 23 States have made reservations to the dispute settlement framework. Of these, 15 States sought to exclude the application of article 66 (a) concerning the submission of disputes to the International Court of Justice in relation to claims of invalidity on the grounds of conflict with peremptory norms (Algeria, Armenia, Belarus, Brazil, China, Cuba, the Czech Republic, Guatemala, Hungary, the Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Slovakia, Tunisia, Ukraine and Viet Nam); and four States have declared that the provisions of article 53 and 64 will not apply in relations between them and those States that have reserved on the application of the dispute settlement framework (Belgium, Denmark, Finland and Portugal). A further four States have declared that the provisions of article 66 do not serve to limit the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice if it exists under any other instrument (Canada, Germany, New Zealand and the United Kingdom).

(6) Paragraph 2 of draft conclusion 21 states that if no other State raises an objection to the notification, then the State making the claim may carry out the measure it has proposed. The right to carry out these measures, however, can only be exercised after “a period which, except in cases of special urgency, shall not be less than three months”. This means, in the first place, that the notification referred to in paragraph 1 should specify a period within which an objection must be made to the notification. The period should be a reasonable period and the Commission determined that, as a general rule, a minimum of three months was a reasonable period. Second, it is only after the expiry of the said period, and if there has been no objection, that the State invoking the invalidity of a treaty can carry out the measure proposed. There may be cases where a three-month period may be too long. For this purpose, paragraph 2 of draft conclusion 21 sets out the possibility of a shorter period “in cases of special urgency”. The draft conclusions do not define “cases of special urgency”. This is to be determined on the basis of the facts in each particular case. However, it can be said that “cases of special urgency” will be those in which time is of the essence. A view was expressed that there is no basis for the position that customary international law contains such a three-month waiting period (or the twelve-month waiting period in paragraph 4 of the draft conclusion).

(7) Paragraph 3 of draft conclusion 21 addresses those cases in which any State concerned raises an objection against a claim that a rule of international law is void as a result of a conflict with a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). If there is such an objection, then the invoking State cannot unilaterally implement the proposed measures. In such a case the States concerned as well as the invoking State are then required to seek a solution through the means indicated in Article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations of their own choice.

(8) Paragraph 4 of draft conclusion 21 provides that if no solution is reached within a period of twelve months, and the objecting State or States concerned offer to submit the matter to the International Court of Justice, the invoking State may not carry out the measure which it has proposed until the dispute is resolved. Paragraph 4 addresses those cases in which the States concerned are not able to find a solution through the means indicated in Article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations. The Commission proceeded from the basis that the invocation of the invalidity of a rule of international law as a result of inconsistency with a peremptory norm of general international law did not, as such, constitute the basis for the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice.⁹¹⁵ However, in the spirit of avoiding unilateralism, the Commission found it appropriate, without obliging submission of the International Court of Justice, to encourage submission of the dispute to the International Court of Justice.

(9) Draft conclusion 21 is a procedural provision, without implication for the lawfulness of any measures that may be carried out. If after the expiration of the twelve-month period no offer to submit the matter to the International Court of Justice is made by the other States concerned, the invoking State is no longer precluded by the procedural provisions of draft conclusion 21 from taking the measure. It is important to emphasize that there is, under this provision, no obligation to submit the matter to the International Court of Justice, nor does this provision establish compulsory jurisdiction. Instead, the provision precludes the State invoking invalidity from carrying out the proposed measures if the other concerned States offer to submit the matter to the International Court of Justice. In the event that such an offer to submit the matter to the International Court of Justice is made, the State invoking invalidity will then only be entitled to carry out the proposed measures after the dispute is resolved and in accordance with a determination by the Court that the measures are justified under international law.

(10) Paragraph 5 is a without prejudice clause. As explained above, draft conclusion 21 does not establish the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice, nor does it create an obligation on any State to submit a matter to the Court or to accept the Court's jurisdiction. By the same token, draft conclusion 21 does not affect any basis for jurisdiction that may exist under any other rule in international law, including the dispute settlement mechanisms under the 1969 Vienna Convention or other applicable dispute settlement provisions agreed to by the States concerned (including the invoking State).

⁹¹⁵ Armed Activities on the Territory of the Congo (see footnote 699 above), at p. 32, para. 64 (“The same applies to the relationship between peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) and the establishment of the Court’s jurisdiction: the fact that a dispute relates to compliance with a norm having such a character, which is assuredly the case with regard to the prohibition of genocide, cannot of itself provide a basis for the jurisdiction of the Court”).

Part Four
General provisions

Conclusion 22

Without prejudice to consequences that specific peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) may otherwise entail

The present draft conclusions are without prejudice to consequences that specific peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) may otherwise entail under international law.

Commentary

(1) Draft conclusion 22 is a without prejudice clause. It provides that the current draft conclusions are without prejudice to the consequences that specific peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) may otherwise entail under international law.

(2) The scope of the present draft conclusions concerns the identification and legal consequences of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). As described in paragraph (3) of the commentary to draft conclusion 1, the present draft conclusions are not intended to address the content of individual peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). In addition to the methodology and process for identifying peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), the draft conclusions also address, in general, the legal consequences flowing from peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). These include consequences for treaty rules, customary international law, unilateral acts and binding resolutions, decisions or other acts of international organizations. The contents of individual peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) may themselves have legal consequences that are distinct from the general legal consequences identified in the present draft conclusions. Hence, draft conclusion 22 is intended to convey that the draft conclusions are without prejudice to any such legal consequences that may otherwise arise from specific peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).

(3) The present draft conclusions do not deal with the consequences arising from a conflict between peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).

(4) One area in which the issue of legal consequences for specific peremptory norms has been raised concerns the consequences of crimes the commission of which are prohibited by peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), such as the prohibition of genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity, in particular the possible consequences for immunity and jurisdiction of national courts. These consequences are not general consequences of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), but rather relate to specific peremptory norms of general international law. As such, they are not addressed in the present draft conclusions.

Conclusion 23
Non-exhaustive list

Without prejudice to the existence or subsequent emergence of other peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), a non-exhaustive list of norms that the International Law Commission has previously referred to as having that status is to be found in the annex to the present draft conclusions.

Commentary

(1) Draft conclusion 1 sets out the scope of the present draft conclusions as concerning the identification and legal consequences of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). As indicated in paragraph (3) of the commentary to draft conclusion 1 and paragraph (2) of the commentary to draft conclusion 22, the present draft conclusions are methodological in nature and do not attempt to address the content of individual peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). As a result, the present draft conclusions do not seek to elaborate a list of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). To elaborate a list of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), including a non-exhaustive list, would require a detailed and rigorous study of many potential norms to determine, first, which of those potential norms meet the criteria set out in Part II of the present draft conclusions and, second, which of the norms that meet the criteria ought to be included in a non-exhaustive list. Such an exercise falls beyond the scope of the exercise of elaborating draft conclusions on the identification and legal consequences of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).

(2) Although the identification of specific norms that have a peremptory character falls beyond the scope of the present draft conclusions, the Commission has decided to include in an annex a non-exhaustive list of norms previously referred to by the Commission as having peremptory character. Draft conclusion 23 refers to this annex. It provides, first, that this annex is without prejudice to the existence or subsequent emergence of other peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). The phrase “without prejudice to the existence or subsequent emergence of other peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens)” is meant to indicate that the inclusion of the list in the annex in no way precludes the existence at present of other norms that may have peremptory character or the emergence of other norms in the future having that character. Second, draft conclusion 23 provides, as a statement of fact, that the norms contained in the annex are those that have been previously referred to by the Commission as having peremptory status. Finally, draft conclusion 23 states that the list contained in the annex is non-exhaustive, which serves to reinforce the fact that this list is without prejudice to other norms having the same character.⁹¹⁶ It is non-exhaustive in two ways. It is non-exhaustive, first, in the sense that beyond the norms identified in the list, there are or may be other peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). Second, it is non-exhaustive in the sense that, in addition to the norms listed in the annex, the Commission has also referred previously to other norms as having peremptory character. The annex should therefore not be seen as excluding the peremptory character of these other norms.

(3) The fact that the annex referred to in draft conclusion 23 contains norms previously referred to by the Commission has two implications for the list. First, the formulation of each norm is based on a formulation previously used by the Commission. The Commission has therefore not attempted to reformulate the norms on the list. As will be seen in the following paragraphs of the commentary to draft conclusion 23, in some cases the Commission has used different formulations in its previous works. The second implication is that there has been no attempt to define the scope, content or application of the norms identified. The annex merely lists norms previously identified by the Commission, relying on the same formulations and without seeking to address any aspects of the content of the rules.

(4) In its previous works, the Commission has used different phrases to qualify the norms to which it has referred. In its commentary to draft article 50 of the draft articles on the law of treaties, it used the phrases “conspicuous example” and “example” respectively when referring to two of the norms.⁹¹⁷ In the commentary to draft article 26 of the draft articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, the Commission ⁹¹⁶ See also paragraph (6) of the commentary to article 40 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts addressing the non-exhaustive nature of the norms referred to in those articles (“It should be stressed that the examples given above may not be exhaustive. In addition, article 64 of the 1969 Vienna Convention contemplates that new peremptory norms of general international law may come into existence through the processes of acceptance and recognition by the international community of States as a whole, as referred to in article 53. The examples given here are thus without prejudice to existing or developing rules of international law which fulfil the criteria for peremptory norms under article 53”).

⁹¹⁷ See paragraphs (1) and (3) of the commentary to draft article 50 of the draft articles on the law of treaties.

referred to the norms on its list as those “clearly accepted and recognized”,⁹¹⁸ while in the commentary to article 40 of the same articles, it used the phrase “generally agreed” to qualify the norm of “aggression” as peremptory, and said there “seems to be widespread agreement” with regard to other norms listed in that paragraph.⁹¹⁹

(5) The first norm identified in the annex is the prohibition of aggression. The prohibition of aggression was referred to by the Commission in the commentary to the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.⁹²⁰ In 1966, the Commission stated that the “law of the Charter concerning the prohibition of the use of force in itself constitutes a conspicuous example of a rule in international law having the character of jus cogens”.⁹²¹ Although not strictly the output of the Commission itself, the 2006 work of its Study Group on fragmentation of international law is also noteworthy. Like the commentary to the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, the conclusions of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law referred to the prohibition of aggression as a peremptory norm.⁹²² The report of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law, after referring to the Commission’s identification of the prohibition of aggression, included “the prohibition of aggressive use of force” on its list of the “most frequently cited candidates for the status of jus cogens”.⁹²³

(6) The second norm identified in the annex is the prohibition of genocide. The prohibition of genocide has been referred to by the Commission with a consistent formulation in all its relevant work. In particular, the draft articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, both in the commentary to draft article 26 and in the commentary to draft article 40, referred to the prohibition of genocide.⁹²⁴ Similarly, both the conclusions and the report of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law refer to the prohibition of genocide.⁹²⁵

(7) The prohibition of crimes against humanity is the third norm included in the annex. The fourth paragraph of the preamble to the 2019 draft articles on crimes against humanity recalled that “the prohibition of crimes against humanity is a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens)”.⁹²⁶ In the commentary to article 26 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, the Commission referred not to the prohibition of crimes against humanity separately, but to the prohibition of “crimes against humanity and torture”.⁹²⁷ The prohibition of crimes against humanity is also referred to in the report of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law as one of the “most frequently cited candidates” for norms with jus cogens status.⁹²⁸

(8) The basic rules of international humanitarian law, the fourth norm in the annex, has been referred to by the Commission in its commentary to article 40 of its articles on ⁹¹⁸ See paragraph (5) of the commentary to article 26 of the draft articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.

⁹¹⁹ Ibid., paragraph (4) of the commentary to article 40.

⁹²⁰ Ibid. (“Among these prohibitions, it is generally agreed that the prohibition of aggression is to be regarded as peremptory”). See also paragraph (5) of the commentary to article 26 (“Those peremptory norms that are clearly accepted and recognized include the prohibitions of aggression”).

⁹²¹ See paragraph (1) of the commentary to draft article 50 of the draft articles on the law of treaties, Yearbook ... 1966, vol. II, para. 38. In paragraph (3) of the same commentary, the Commission referred to the “unlawful use of force contrary to the principles of the Charter”.

⁹²² See conclusion (33) of the Conclusions of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law (footnote 863 above).

⁹²³ Report of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law (see footnote 857 above), para. 374. It should be noted that the report of the Study Group also refers, as a separate norm, to the right to self-defence.

⁹²⁴ See paragraph (5) of the commentary to article 26 and paragraph (4) of the commentary to draft article 40 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.

⁹²⁵ Conclusion (33) of the Conclusions of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law (see footnote 863 above) and the report of the Study Group (see footnote 857 above), para. 374.

⁹²⁶ Preamble, draft articles on crimes against humanity, chapter IV of the present report.

⁹²⁷ See paragraph (5) of the commentary to draft article 26 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.

⁹²⁸ Report of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law (see footnote 857 above), para. 374.

responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.⁹²⁹ The conclusions of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law refer to basic rules of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflict.⁹³⁰ The report of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law, on the other hand, referred to “the prohibition of hostilities directed at civilian population (‘basic rules of international humanitarian law’).”⁹³¹

(9) The fifth norm in the annex is the prohibition of racial discrimination and apartheid. The prohibition of racial discrimination and apartheid is referred to in the commentary to article 40 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.⁹³² The commentary to article 26 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, however, only refers to the prohibition of racial discrimination, without any reference to apartheid.⁹³³ The report of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law also refers to the prohibition of racial discrimination and apartheid.⁹³⁴ The conclusions of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law, however, refer to the prohibition of apartheid along with torture, without any reference to racial discrimination.⁹³⁵

(10) The annex also includes the prohibition of slavery as the sixth norm on the list of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) previously referred to by the Commission. The prohibition of slavery was referred to by the Commission as a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens) in the commentary to draft article 26 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.⁹³⁶ The commentary to draft article 40 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts refers to the prohibition of slavery and the slave trade.⁹³⁷ The commentary to the draft articles on the law of treaties, for its part, refers to the prohibition of the trade in slaves.⁹³⁸

⁹²⁹ See paragraph (5) of the commentary to draft article 40 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.

⁹³⁰ See conclusion (33) of the Conclusions of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law (footnote 863 above).

⁹³¹ Report of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law (see footnote 857 above), para. 374.

⁹³² See paragraph (4) of the commentary to article 40 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.

⁹³³ Ibid., paragraph (5) of the commentary to article 26.

⁹³⁴ Report of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law (see footnote 857 above), para. 374.

⁹³⁵ See conclusion (33) of the conclusions of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law (footnote 863 above).

⁹³⁶ See paragraph (5) of the commentary to article 26 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.

⁹³⁷ Ibid., paragraph (4) of the commentary to article 40. This is similarly the formulation used in the report of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law (see footnote 857 above), para. 374.

⁹³⁸ See paragraph (3) of the commentary to draft article 50 of the draft articles on the law of treaties.

(11) The prohibition of torture is the seventh norm in the annex. The prohibition of torture is referred to by the Commission in the commentary to draft article 40 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.⁹³⁹ In the commentary to draft article 26 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, the Commission referred to the prohibition of “crimes against humanity and torture”.⁹⁴⁰ The conclusions of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law, on the other hand, referred to the prohibition of “apartheid and torture”.⁹⁴¹

(12) The final norm listed in the annex is the right of self-determination. In describing the norm as having peremptory character, the Commission has used the formulation “the right of self-determination”, although it has at times referred to the “right to self-determination”.⁹⁴²

(13) As explained in paragraph (2), the list is non-exhaustive not only in the sense that it does not purport to cover all peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) that may exist or that may emerge in the future, but also in the sense that it does not reflect all the norms that have been referred to in some way by the Commission as having a peremptory character. This includes those norms that the Commission has considered in the course of its deliberations. For example, in the commentary to draft article 50 of the draft articles on the law of treaties, the Commission referred, inter alia, to the prohibition of piracy and to the principle of the sovereign “equality of States” – a fundamental principle under the Charter of the United Nations.⁹⁴³ The Commission had also referred to the important role of the Charter of the United Nations, especially those provisions of the Charter which set out the purposes and principles of the United Nations for the development of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens). In the draft articles adopted on first reading in 1976 under the topic “State responsibility”, the Commission also referred to obligations “of essential importance for the safeguarding and preservation of the human environment, such as those prohibiting massive pollution of the atmosphere or of the seas” as peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens).⁹⁴⁴

(14) The norms in the annex are presented in no particular order. Their order does not, in any way, signify a hierarchy among them.

⁹³⁹ See paragraph (5) of the commentary to article 40 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts. The report of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law (see footnote 857 above, para. 374) also referred to the prohibition of torture as an example of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens).

⁹⁴⁰ See paragraph (5) of the commentary to article 26 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.

⁹⁴¹ See conclusion (33) of the conclusions of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law (footnote 863 above).

⁹⁴² See paragraph (5) of the commentary to article 40 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, in which the Commission referred to the “the obligation to respect the right of self-determination”. See also conclusion (33) of the conclusions of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law (footnote 863 above) and the report of the Study Group on fragmentation of international law (footnote 857 above), para. 374. In paragraph (3) of the commentary to draft article 50 of the draft articles on the law of treaties, the Commission referred to the “principle of self-determination”. In paragraph (5) of the commentary to article 26 of the articles on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, the Commission referred to the right to self-determination.

⁹⁴³ See paragraph (3) of the commentary to draft article 50 of the draft articles on the law of treaties.

⁹⁴⁴ Draft article 19, paragraph 3 (d), of the draft articles on State responsibility, Yearbook ... 1976, vol. II (Part Two), pp. 95–96, read in conjunction with paragraphs (17) and (18) of the commentary to draft article 19 (ibid., p. 102).

Annex

- (a) The prohibition of aggression;
- (b) The prohibition of genocide;
- (c) The prohibition of crimes against humanity;
- (d) The basic rules of international humanitarian law;
- (e) The prohibition of racial discrimination and apartheid;
- (f) The prohibition of slavery;
- (g) The prohibition of torture;
- (h) The right of self-determination.