Under water investigations

An ancient ship has (0) BEEN discovered at the bottom of the Mediterranean Sea. The ship, which sank off the coast of Tunisia more (33) _____ 2,300 years ago, is already giving historians fresh insights into trade and diet in the ancient world. The remains of the ship _____ (34) found last August on the final day of an expedition undertaken (35) _____ the British scientist Barry Molloy. Three of his team, who were using a miniature submarine to explore the seabed, spotted rows of storage jars and some rotted wood. (35) _____ of the jars was brought to the surface by a diver, and inside it the scientists found bones belonging to freshwater fish and some olives. After examining the contents and design of the jar, Dr Molloy concluded that the ship had _____ (37) following a trade route when (38) _____ sank. He intends to return to the site of the shipwreck, 32 km from the coast, (39) _____ that he can conduct further investigations. He hopes to make use of a new robot that uses sound to make a computer plan of the wreck, and in this way he can create an accurate picture of (40) _____ the ship looked like.
